Sharansky Still The Choice For U.N. Ambassadorship

JERUSALEM (JTA) — Natan Sharansky is still the Foreign Ministry's preferred candidate for the vacant post of Israeli ambassador to the United Nations, Foreign Minister Moshe Arens said recently.

Arens gave this affirmation a day after the ministry appointments committee failed to take up the U.N. post in its discussion of a batch of new appointments to go into effect later this year.

Sharansky's candidacy aroused controversy here and abroad when it was first mentioned some months ago by Deputy Foreign Minister Binyamin Netanyahu.

Netanyahu was not present at the appointments committee because he has been sent by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir to Ottawa to brief the Canadian government on the peace proposals Shamir presented to President Bush in Washington.

Among those nominated by the committee is former Israeli air force fighter ace Ron Pecker, who will be consul general in Los Angeles.

Pecker is a relative hard-liner on the issue of the territories and gave his help to the Likud during last year's election campaign. His nomination is one of the 15 that traditionally are high-level political appointees within the foreign service.

Another post not dealt with by the committee was that of ambassador to Paris, where Ovadia Soffer is in his fifth year as ambassador.

Soffer had previously served as ambassador to the United Nations in Geneva, and has thus been out of Israel for seven years.
