"Snicide Wind."

In Brazil and other parts of South America the natives know and fear a certain condition of the air, which they call "suicide wind." It is not a superstition, but an actual condition of the atmosphere which seems to drive people to madness, and during its continuance self-inflicted deaths are numerque. Criminologists and scientists all over the world are interested in this peculiar atmospheric influence, which is indicated by a soft, moist, warm air that settles heavily on the earth.

"I did nothing. That is, nothing but eat my dinner and talk to the other guests. There were six of us, and Mrs. Willoughby served a regular banquet. She sat down at the head of her table at least a dozen times, and just as many times jumped up to offer us some new delicacy. Her face was so flushed, and she was so tired, and she didn't eat a mouthful-not one crumb! At last, when I ventured to ask her if she couldn't taste some of the good things sne was giving us, she said not to worry -that she couldn't, even if she had time, because it always made her ill to eat when she was overtired." "You're joking!"

"I never was more serious in my life. After dinner she excused herself for a full hour, while the rest of us talked to each other. Then she came in and apologized by saying that the woman who was to wash the dishes came an hour too early, and that there were so many things she simply had to see to herself she couldn't get away. After that we went home-and do you know what I said?"

"Something caustie,"

"No-just this: 'A fig for your bill of fare! Show me you bill of company.' I'm going to invite Mrs. Willoughby to a dish of hasty pudding some day, and find out whether she really charming or not!"-Youth's Companion.

A Tale of Two Cities.

Notwithstanding the disparity in size between Seattle and Tacoma, the rivalry in other respects between the two cities is as keen as in their earlier days, when they were young "boom" towns.

A curious instance of this is seen in the names by which the towering mountain that lifts its tall peak to the southeast is known in the two places. In Tacoma it is treason to call it anything else than "Mount Tacoma." while in Seattle it is "Mount Ranier."

A traveler when about half-way between the two cities saw two boys fighting by the roadside. Before he could separate them one of the boys got the other down, and after banging the victim's face into the soft ground, sat panting but victorious astride of

"What's the name o' that mountain now?" the victor demanded in exultant tones.

," humbly replied the vanquished lad. The effort to free his mouth from the mud and grass which his opponent had rubbed into it made the answer unintelligible to the traveler; but the victor was satisfied and let him up.

Oklahoma.

The State of Oklahoma would enter the Union with a population estiraated at nearly 1,250,000, about that of such States as Connecticut, Maryland, West Virginia and Nebraska. Two-thirds of that population is now within the borders of Oklahoma and one-third in Indian Territory. In area the proposed new State, with its 70, 430 square miles, exceeds slightly Mis souri and almost equals North Dakota. In the sixteen years since Oklahoma was erected into a territory it has grown more rapidly than any equal section of the West in wealth. population and variety of resources.

The clothing with citizenship of the prosperous native tribes of the Indian Territory is a most significant departure. The laws of exclusion will be lifted at one stroke from virtually the whole population of 400,000.- New York World.

"District No. 5" had a visitor. With shining eyes the young school teacher told her pupils of the treat before them -the traveler who really had seen the strange cities and countries they had been studying about, and was going to great world beyond their hills. The teacher's cheeks were flushed with excitement, for she was of the fortunate ones to whom life's marvels are never stale.

But as the visitor talked, a trouble drew the happiness from her eyes; she that something had spoiled her joy.

beauty about us. Certain Indian tribes, it is said, count seven cardinal points of the compass instead of four-north, east, south, west, up, down and here, and the "here" is never forgotten or ignored. The secret of the beauty of the handicraft of any uncivilized people-and it is often very beautiful—is that it grew out of, and is exquisitely fitted to, its environment. They begin with the 'here."

"Isn't it a pity." an Eastern woman asked a basket-weaver of the far West, "that you live so far away?" The woman answered her in surprise: "I don't live far away. I live right here."

Ambition is a noble thing; no life can amount to anything without it. But sometimes the highest ambition that one can possess is the desire to make the most of the "here."-Youth's Companion.
