HIGHWAY DEVELOPMENT SOLVES TRANSPORTATION

The people of our land were never able to deal as comprehensively with the problems of highways development and highways transport as today. For now, as a result of war's challenge and demands upon all producers for their utmost endeavor, we know where people are in greatest need of additional transportation facilities. And from experience gained before and during the war, we have seen the manner in which highways transportation can be harnessed most effectively to the service of our people.

"Take the great problem of rural highways transportation," citis Mr. W. O. Rutherford, Vice President of the Goodrich Rubber Co., "and consider a concrete and definite need that it presented itself in the State of Utah during the war. In the vicinity of Loa, Wayne county, back 75 miles from the railroad, several carloads of fat hogs were available for market, but there was no means of shipping them to the nearest rail point. The solution was found by improving the highways to carry motor transport, the hogs were moved rapidly to rail shipping point and an additional food supply thereby available. And the solution of this problem had the effect of moving the whole back country, a vast area in itself, up closer to the railroads and the markets of the world. While the exodus of the hogs symbolized the creation of new wealth in Wayne county, the transport service was able to return from the shipping point to Loa with the wares of our great industries, thus providing a larger market. Hence Highways Transport linked up the farms with the desired markets. It also spelled opportunity to the great body of loyal workers in America in that it provided for a larger field to be supplied by the indispensable products of their hands."

"What took place in Utah has happened in nearly every corner of our land. Our colleges and universities and other forces of education in several of our most progressive states are already setting up courses of instruction which will equip men to occupy important posts on the frontiers of this development. And of lasting consequence, they will commence to lay the foundation for the progressive science of transportation and communication."

HOT ONE FOR HITCHCOCK

During the recent discussion in the Senate over the proposed publication of the terms of the peace treaty as made public in Europe, Senator Hitchcock, ranking member of the Democratic side of the Foreign Relations committee, accused Republicans of cooperating with Germany in her effort to get better terms. Recalling a most obnoxious embargo measure introduced by Senator Hitchcock about the time of the sinking of the Lusitania, Senator Miles Poindexter of Washington, said: "My observation is that the Senators who are most forward in making imputations that other Senators are instigated by German propaganda are the same ones who when the United States was actually at war with Germany were the last ones to support active war measures. One of them in particular, I remember, introduced a resolution here placing an embargo upon shipments of ammunition to those great nations that were fighting Germany and that afterwards became our allies in the war. Those who attempted to favor Germany in this way are the ones who now are so forward in charging other Senators with being influenced by Germany." At this point the Vice-President came to the relief of Hitchcock and asked Senator Poindexter to desist before unpleasantness were exchanged.

MESSENGER BOYS ARE FUTURE EXECUTIVES

The B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company looks upon its messenger boys as its future executives. In a recently published volume called "Playing the Game as Messenger Boy," the company talks as frankly to the lads and in much the same spirit as a typical American father would do. Although expressed in delightfully practical plain language, drawing its similies from the ball field, the "Best in the Long Run" Company tells of its junior employees that the human quality of its organization must be developed as perfectly and carefully as the purely mechanical science of the rubber industry.

The reviewer cannot but be impressed with the thought that this great corporation recognizes its obligation to the world to provide the best rubber material possible, and that it fully realizes that only the best human service can accomplish this ideal.

In the forward of the Company likens its organization to a football team, saying "No football team would expect to win a championship game if the quarterback had a broken arm. Just so the B. F. Goodrich Company cannot hope to achieve the fullest measure of success unless every individual on its team is doing his best and all are pulling together. The Goodrich Company warns the boys that the whole Company may be judged by their conduct toward visitors and urges them to take their lesson from the erect, alert soldier who is 'on his toes' all the time. Of especial importance, says "Playing the game of messenger boy" is the observation to be drawn from the conduct of the U. S. Marines at Chateau Thierry. The Marines had prepared for years to give the account of themselves that they did. "The odds against them were very great," the boys are told, "Yet we all know how they stopped the Germans and a few days later thrashed the famous Prussian Guards. You cannot hope to reach your desired goal in a day or a year. The Marines had to train many long, tedious months before they were ready of Chateau Thierry. You can cultivate just the same spirit as made the U. S. Marines renowned the world over."

Theodore Roosevelt always had a word of cheer for everyone. The small boy on the street was just as attractive to him as the great statesman. Courtesy simply comes from one's heart and is another term for kindness," the writer points out in a warm tribute to the great president. "A butler or a porter may be ever so polite to his superiors; he may affect an air of great respect, yet he may not possess a single grain of courtesy. His politness only extends to those from whom he expects a tip, or some other benefit. "Would you rather be classed with a fawning butler who pretends to be polite, or with such a man as Theodore Roosevelt?"

In a chapter about mistakes, the book enjoins the boys to be manful in admitting mistakes, and quotes Abraham Lincoln's remarks "Show me a man who never makes a mistake and I will show you a fool." The proper mental attitude for success is drawn from the life of Andrew Carnegie, and the boys are warned to cut down the width of their "yellow streak."

In conclusion the booklet reads: "When you get to first base in a game of baseball, you don't fold your arms and wonder how long before it's time to go home. The first chance you get you're down to second and all your gang yells "Attaboy Ole Top." The game you are in now is the game of life. It is a bigger game than was ever played between the New York Giants and the Chicago White Sox or anybody else in a world series. We can only play the game once and if we lose there won't be any comeback. Thousands of boys never realize this until they are men of 50. Opportunity has come to them but they were caught flat-footed off second base. They were watching the clock instead of the game. Position, wealth and happiness is yours if you go after it. Nothing can stop you, but yourself. It's up to you."

CONCERNING TAXATION OF PATENTED MINES

Under the ruling of the Attorney-General's office in 1918, owners of patented mining claims who seek relief from taxes on the ground that annual work has been performed on the claims, must file their affidavits "at the next succeeding session" of either the county, or State, board of equalization, or the Tax Commission at its meeting on October 1st. Declaration of intent to perform annual labor, with necessary bond, must also be filed "at the next succeeding session" of one of the above boards. Owners should see that their affidavits are all filed with one of the is set forth in the law, Chapter 206. It is safer and saves trouble if the affidavit is filed with the county board in July. Each claim for which exemption is claimed must be specified. The correct form for affidavit boards on or before October 1st. Laws of 1915.
