

DOGS' TAILS WAG TO MOVIE NAMES

Hollywood's Pets Sometimes Get Weighty Titles As Result of Owners' Part in Making of Films

By WADE WERNER (Associated Press Feature Writer) HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Dec. 13. (AP)—No doubt a dog's life is a dog's life the world over. Hollywood, however, probably is the only town in the world where many dogs answer to motion picture titles.

Strolling down the boulevard one occasionally hears phrases like "get away from there, Stolen Bride!" or "Lie down, Noah's Ark!" or the voice of a beautiful woman instructing her chauffeur as she steps out of a limousine to go into a shop: "James, take good care of Flesh and the Devil while I'm gone."

are Zorro, Rooney and Robin, who might be described as canine abbreviations of "The Mark of Zorro," "Little Annie Rooney" and "Robin Hood," except that Robin is a St. Bernard and therefore hardly an abbreviation. Coincidentally with the news that Roland West is directing his first talking picture, "Nightstick," comes the information that his new dog bears that name. If the name of the picture is changed before it reaches the screen the dog will feel like an orphan, but no one ever thinks of that.

So far as can be ascertained off-hand, no Hollywood hound ever bore a name like Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, but Francis X. Bushman has a Great Dane he calls Hamlet. And now that "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" is being made into a motion picture some screen colony dachshund doubtless will have to carry that title around as an apt description of his long span.

By no means all film folk of course, name their dogs after pictures. Richard Dix, for example, has a bloodhound he calls Prince and a mongrel named Jake, which is about what those same dogs would have been called in Indianapolis.

Emil Jannings has Chiang Kai Shek, Lady Chang and Sun Yat Sen running around in his yard—Chinese chows with Chinese names. Bebe Daniels has a wire-haired terrier she calls Snoopy Horse; W. S. Van Dyke, the director, calls his hound Damn, and Clara Bow, believe it or not, calls hers Dolly.

Women Of Turkey Discover Freedom Has Its Drawbacks

By PRISCILLA KING (Associated Press Correspondent) ANGORA, Turkey, Dec. 15. (AP)—Gazi Moustapha Kemal, iron-handed shaper of the new Turkey's destiny, has turned to a woman for help. She is Madame Fiore Bocart, Belgian educational expert, who has come here post-haste at the Turkish government's request to make emancipation safe for the womanhood of Turkey.

In the present stage of transition Turkish women are at a critical cross-roads, half terrified by the skeleton of their imprisoned past which dangles there and half befuddled by the vista of the strange free future which stretches before them.

It is this transition period which finds 50 percent of the women throughout the land insane or neurasthenic, according to the estimate of Turkey's leading alienist, Dr. Mezhar Osman, and fills the press with almost daily instances of suicides among girls and young women. The weakening of parental and religious authority under the new regime, the opportunity for romantic love affairs instead of the strictly business marriages of the old days, the curtailment of all the seclusion and even virtual imprisonment which yet granted protection from the west that beset freedom, have all been factors tending to make Turkish women lose their balance.

Much has been written about their gigantic progress in the last few years, but in reality among the 10 percent of literate Turkish women can be counted today only a handful who have definitely taken up professions, not more than a half-dozen each of doctors, lawyers, actresses and writers. The vast majority of the upper classes have learned nothing new except the Charleston; still 90 percent of Turkish women still wear the veil, and practically all of them are at their wits' end to know what to do with this new freedom.

Work is the panacea for the wounds of transition, decrees the Gazi, and to work the women of the land shall go under the skillful direction of the Belgian expert, Madame Bocart.

She is opening her campaign this year with the creation of the first vocational schools for girls in Turkey, one here in the new capital and two at Constantinople. Next year Smyrna, Trebizond, Adana and the other chief Anatolian cities will have each its first girls' vocational school, and thus gradually the young women of Turkey are to learn how to employ their time and gain their livelihood, two arts of which they are now almost totally ignorant.

Their intelligence and energy, which some say surpasses that of Turkish men, will probably carry them far once they get started. Within the next ten years Turkey's present shaky economic situation should be greatly strengthened by the influx into trades and business of the nation's woman power trained in the new vocational schools.

Madame Bocart's practical and far-sighted program includes not only all the usual courses of vocational schools, but also the rehabilitation of important old Turkish handicrafts long defunct, such as embroidery, ceramics and the fabrication of fine brocades, all of which, redeveloped by the girls whom she will train, can form an important part of Tur-

MAY RESTRICT IMMIGRATION OF MEXICANS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14. (AP)—The Harris bill, to apply the quota provisions of the immigration law to Mexico was approved unanimously by the Senate Committee on Immigration.

Mexican immigrants, which last year totalled 57,000 would be restricted to 1500.

W. W. Husband, second assistant Secretary of Labor told the committee it was a mistake to assume that immigration from Mexico could be restricted under the present law.

Senator Harris of Georgia, sponsor of the bill, declared immigrants from Mexico were "the least desirable" of any country in the western hemisphere.

MARRIAGE LICENSES ISSUED

MUNCIE—COOMBS: Clifford Earl, 24, and Orpha, 20, both of Alhambra.

BROWN—REYNOLDS: Ralph W., 21, of Los Angeles, and Elizabeth McAlister, 21, of San Diego.

J. W. Wilson, general manager of the West End borax mine, is ill in San Francisco, according to word received by his sister, Miss Laura Wilson. Mr. Wilson was in a Los Angeles hospital for about a month, and is now convalescing in San Francisco.

Stenography and millinery will be the two revolutionary branches of the new schools, for to date there has never been a Turkish stenographer and there has never been a Turkish milliner. The Turkish form of the Arabic alphabet was a kind of shorthand in itself, hence no stenographers were needed, but with the recent adoption of the Latin alphabet the need of typists and stenographers has been created.

In the few years since hats have become permissible for women no Turkish girl has turned milliner, but the Turkish government's recent summoning of an important Belgian milliner, Madame Casiau, chief of the Bruxelles house which has the Queen of Belgium, is calculated to give impetus to this neglected trade through the millinery courses which she is to give in the new vocational schools.

HUSBAND KILLS HIMSELF WHEN WIFE BOBS LOCKS

METZ, France, Dec. 15. (AP)—Furious because his wife had shorn off her pretty hair, a workman, Henri Lohstetter, locked himself in his cottage and hanged himself with his belt.

When the neighbors broke in the door he was dead. Lohstetter was 24 years of age and left two children.

It costs five times as much to be buried as it did twenty years ago. No wonder we have so many Scotch centenarians now.
