A New Yorker At Large

By G. D. SEYMOUR NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—On two nights just a week apart, Broadway is its idliest and its busiest. The duldest evening of the year is Christmas eve. The most tumultuous, year after year, save when a quadriennial November brings an election night through into Times Square, is New Year's eve. On the night before Christmas even the faces that are a part of Broadway are missing. The woman who sells the Birth Control Review apparently has a home, after all. The doormen in front of the movie theaters are apprentices, lacking the height and grandeur of the majestic menials stationed there on ordinary nights. Cab starters in front of restaurants and cafes drowse inside the revolving doors. Within the movie houses only the few front rows are filled. Even the blithest of pipe organ jazz sounds cathedral-lesque and somber as they reverberate through empty galleries and echoes against the vaulted ceilings. At a few theater premiers audiences are as sparse—only a few friends of the producer and the players, and a handful of critics who can't escape attendance. Here and there a shop is open to serve belated buyers of Christmas gifts. Along the sidewalks a few figures move, but none of them are loitering as on ordinary nights. All the signs of the square are alight, and the Christmas tree in the center of the street sheds its beams with wonted brilliance, but the scene is anything but cheering. Wilderness of Tumult A week later the vista is transformed. Throngs mill so thickly in Times Square that mounted police must shout and threaten in order to break a lane for traffic. Out of upper windows along the street rivulets of paper stream down, and gusts of confetti are tossed. The din of thousands of horns splits the air, and merges into a numbing monotone of sound. The blaze of light from the signs above the street is reflected palely against upturned faces scanning the timepieces which surmount the square as the hands creep slowly toward midnight and the new year. The movie houses are overflowing with spectators, and theaters are jammed with patrons who have paid as much as $25 for the privilege of standing up. At every restaurant and chow-meerie the doorman is explaining to arrivals that all the tables are taken. Midnight? What of it? The crowd in Times Square is constantly moving, but only around and around the triangle. Everybody is busy going nowhere, waiting for midnight. The clocks say midnight, but there is neither increase nor diminution in the noise as the new year arrives. If whistles are blowing along the waterfront or across the East river, they are borne too faintly into Broadway to be audible by themselves. Half an hour after 12 has struck the throng seems to be thinning. Swarms collect at the entrance to the subway kiosks. By 2 a.m. the crowd is largely gone. By 8 on New Year's morning the square is almost empty.

Hoover Grand-children Will Join Children of American Revolution

Herbert Hoover III and his sister, Ann, (above), grandchildren of President-elect Hoover, are to be invited by Mrs. Josiah Van Orsdel (lower right), to join the Children of the American Revolution, of which she is national president. Sue French Strother (lower left), daughter of Rep. and Mrs. James French Strother of West Virginia, is one of the youngest members.

By SUE McNAMARA (Associated Press Feature Writer) WASHINGTON, Jan. 5. (AP)—The Children of the American Revolution that the two grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover will be invited to become members of that organization. President-elect Hoover has joined the Sons of the American Revolution and that makes Ann, who is two years old, and Herbert Hoover III, aged eight months, eligible to membership in the patriotic society of children. Ann and Herbert are the children of Herbert Hoover, Jr., an instructor in Harvard business school. The two youngsters have often visited here in the Hoover home on S street. With the exception of the president of each chapter, the offices in the Children of the American Revolution are held by children. Some as young as five years are as corresponding secretaries. The membership of 12,000 is made up of children whose parents are members of the Sons or Daughters of the American Revolution. The children range in age from infants to girl of 18 and young men of 21. The youngest delegate to the last national convention was Sue French Strother, aged 17 months, the daughter of Rep. James Strother of West Virginia. More than 200 children are expected to attend the next national convention in Washington the week of April 19 when the D.A.R. also will have its convention. One of the features of the children's gathering will be the dedication of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier of the American Revolution in the yard of the old Presbyterian meeting house in Alexandria, Va. Each child in the society is contributing a dime towards the memorial. Seeing that proper respect is paid the flag is part of the duty of the little members. A group of girls in Washington, seeing the stars and stripes hanging limply from a hotel staff one rainy night, indignantly called upon the manager. He assured them the error never would be repeated. Mrs. Josiah A. Van Orsdel is serving her fourth term as national president of the Children of the American Revolution. She is a native of Nebraska, but has lived in Washington for more than 20 years. She is the wife of Justice Van Orsdel of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and is a member of the local Dolly Madison chapter of the D. A. R. In 1927 she was awarded the American Cross of Honor by the United States Flag Association. Mrs. Harriet M. Lathrop, author of "Five Little Peppers," organized the first chapter of the Children of the American Revolution in 1895.

NEVADA PRESS ASS'N. PREPARES FOR BIG ANNUAL GAB FEST

RENO, Jan. 5. (Special)—Preparations for what is expected to be one of the biggest and most worthwhile meetings of the Nevada State Press Association has ever had were launched at a meeting of five members of the organization in Reno last week. Two outside speakers of reputation will address the gathering, which will assemble in the Journalism laboratory of the University of Nevada sometime in January or February, if plans of the program committee carry through. Friend Richardson, former governor of California, past president of the press association of that state, and well known newspaper publisher, will be one of those who will be invited to address the Nevada journalists, while the other will be Ben Read, former secretary of the California Newspaper Publishers' Association, who is now publisher of a paper in southern California. In event these men are unable to accept the invitation to appear before the Nevada press, others of equal ability and standing will be invited. Along with the addresses of the outsiders will be brief presentations of editorial and business problems peculiar to Nevada by members of the press of this state, followed by free-for-all round-table discussions. Nevada newspaper men are asked to write to Secretary Claude Smith, editor of the Fallon Standard, the subjects they wish to have discussed at the round table. In the evening a banquet, to which will be invited prominent Nevada citizens from outside the ranks of journalism, at the Riverside hotel is planned.

FERRY RATE FIGHT WON BY ASS'N.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3. (AP)—Recommendations of the American Bar association regarding the legal phases of radio legislation probably will be made in January while congress is considering the broadcasting situation. The rise of radio from a novelty to an institution, with a resultant increase in legislation and litigation pertaining to broadcasting prompted the bar association to make a study of the legal problems affecting its progress. A committee on radio law appointed by the association has discussed the problems in closed session with members of the commission, radio engineers, lawyers and representatives of the various branches of the industry. Senator Dill of Washington, co-author of the radio act, and B. M. Webster, jr., specialist in radio for the department of justice, attended. Each representative gave the views of his organization regarding the necessity of amending radio legislation now in force and on such defects as have been observed in the operation of the law. Dr. J. H. Dellinger and Lt. Com. T. A. M. Craven, technical advisers to the commission, explained the engineering problems which, in their opinion, the lawyers must take into consideration. Members of the committee are Louis G. Caldwell, chief of counsel for the commission; P. C. Fernald, Boston; Robert T. Swains, New York; E. A. Zimmerman, Chicago; and C. E. Bates, Seattle. The committee will submit a report in January to the executive committee of the bar association for approval.

NEGRO ACTORS CINCH ROLE

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 5. (Special)—Taking the advice of their director, Paul Sloane, literally, two members of the cast for "Hearts in Dixie," an all-Negro Fox-Movietone feature, became so imbued with the idea of doing the marriage ceremony correctly that they went out and got married so there would be no doubt in their minds as to just how the knot is tied. Sloane told them all about the action he expected to film and what they should say and do, advised them to get letter perfect so that they could make the sequence a few days later. Although Washington never had met until they came to work in this production, they decided they might as well get the real lowdown on marriage so they journeyed down to the Los Angeles marriage license bureau, kept their plan secret, and when Sloane had finished his film wedding revealed that they were bride and groom—real as well as reel. Sloane told them he felt they should have told him, then they could have had their real wedding right before the Fox Movietone cameras.
