A New Yorker At Large

By G. D. SEYMOUR
NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—Two men came, a few minutes apart, into a bookshop in the west Forties. The first asked to look at collectors' items, saying he wanted to make a gift and would pay well for something of merit. The dealer showed him an illuminated manuscript priced at $500 and while he examined it, proceeded, at the customer's request, to wait on the other patron. The latter wanted a second hand volume which had to be dug out of an obscure shelf and the dealer went after it. When he returned both men were gone, and so was the manuscript.

Tricks of the Trade
A dealer near the Grand Central terminal, many of whose patrons are transients carrying luggage, has learned to watch for suitcases securely strapped, but having false panels, which can be opened to admit books without unstrapping the suitcase. Another found a thief carrying a box well tied up, but with a trick opening at one end which slipped back to make room for stolen tomes. Still another discovered a filcher slipping two $15 volumes into a specially-fashioned overcoat sleep 18 inches wide.

Confederates, of course—in a new and formidable form of thievery which has sprung up in New York within the last ten months and which is costing book dealers a collective fortune. Recent public interest in prices commanded by rare books has attracted the attention of crooks to the field of book stealing, and the increase in the number of $10 and $15 books and the more frequent issuance of costly limited editions have enhanced the profits to be made.

Libraries have guards at their doors to examine outgoing volumes and forestall theft. Department stores assign their own detectives to book counters as to other merchandise displays. But the average proprietor of a small bookshop cannot offend patrons by scrutinizing their packages as they leave, nor afford detectives to watch every customer.

A few years ago the book thief was like any shoplifter or kleptomaniac, picking up a book as he would a trinket or a bottle of perfume from a counter, with little knowledge of its value. Today the book thief knows books and their worth. Deftly he purloins a $10 volume at one shop. In half an hour he has sold it for $3 at another shop nearby. In any other city buyers of second hand books are few enough so that a thief would have to sell often to the same dealer, and would soon be suspected, but in New York there are half a hundred or more shops where a second hand book can be sold.

Erudite But Errant
Quite by accident a midtown book seller saw an old patron, a man with a university degree and widely known as a scholar, slip a book secretly into a false suitcase. Instead of having him arrested he insisted on examining his home library, where he recovered several hundred stolen volumes, readied for resale by erasure of labels.

Most of the thieves work alone or in pairs, but one "ring" has been uncovered. Its head was a former bookshop clerk who spotted thieving browsers at the store where he worked, and presently, quitting his job, went to the offenders and blackmailed them into stealing books for him on a systematic scale. He resold them and pocketed most of the profits.

FAMOUS PAIR REUNITED BY FOX DIRECTOR

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 12, (Special)—Frank Borzage is on the eve of beginning his next Fox Films production, which will reunite the trio that made "Th Heaven" and "Street Angel,"—Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor and Borzage. The story is by Tristram Tupper, who wrote Borzage's last picture, "The River," and while the picture has not been titled as yet, many are familiar with the story in general after reading it as "Three Episodes in the Life of Timothy Osborn," in a national magazine last spring.

WHITE COATS AID TRAFFIC COP

Increasing accidents and fatalities to traffic policemen in cities and towns throughout the country during the past year have given impetus to a wide-spread movement for better safeguarding these public servants, according to information gleaned from a survey just completed.

For this production Stage 3 on the east lot of Fox Films in Hollywood is being transformed from the wheat ranch just used by F. W. Murnau in making portions of "Our Daily Bread," into a countryside of New York State. There are rolling hills, woods, several houses, a country road and a rambling brook, all conceived and worked out under the personal direction of Harry Oliver, Fox Films art director, who designed and built the set used in Fox Hills by Borzage to make "The River" and which critics and others styled "the greatest set ever built for a motion picture."

Statistics reveal that traffic officers face their greatest danger of injury while occupying stations on storm evenings and it is to better protect them during these periods that initial civic efforts are being largely directed. One of the most serious students of the problem, Captain Charles Goff of the San Francisco traffic department, believes that much of the danger on stormy nights may be eliminated by making the officers more easily visible to motorists.

Outside of Farrell and Miss Gaynor no casting has been definitely decided upon, but as the chief action of the picture centers about these two, they probably will work some time before there is necessity for other supporting players.

Taking occasion to strongly commend the street and highway safety campaign recently launched through the nation-wide organization of Buick dealers by E. T. Strong, president of the Buick Motor Company, Captain Goff recently detailed to a group of Pacific coast Buick executives steps taken by him thus far in solving the traffic officer problem. At present he is investigating the feasibility of equipping his policemen with white rubber raincoats to replace the black slickers and hats now in use.

Mr. F. D. B. Gay, of Provo, Utah, one of the foremost promoters of highway building in Utah, is in Las Vegas for a few days.

A writer complains that many of our soldiers forgot their wives during the World War. Well, we guess the war sort of substituted for them.
Now that the courts have decided that a man has the right to control his wife, all we have to do is tell the wives about it.
