they have been calling attention to the dangerthat lurks in dishes that aer improperly washed. Disease germs, they state, are often transferred from dishes, glasses, and eating utensils that have not been properly sterilized. "It is obvious," runs a statement by the United States Public Health Service, "that complete sterilization of knives, forks, spoons, dishes, cups and glasses in restaurants should be a common practice since great numbers of people, with all kinds of germs in their mouths, either place the same utensils in their mouths or have such intimate contact with them as to make them dangerous for use by others. without proper sterilization."
