New Detroit Scheme Lets Pedestrian And Motorist Work Light

Detroit is experimenting with a device whereby a pedestrian, seeking to cross a street where the traffic light is set green continuously, can throw a control and have a green light in his favor 20 seconds. A motorist can accomplish the same by tooting his horn.

DETROIT, Mar. 28.—(AP)—A device that makes the motorist and the pedestrian alike his own traffic policeman is being tried out by the police at a west side street intersection here. If the device proves workable it probably will be installed at a number of intersections where little traveled streets cross arterial highways. The installation is a traffic signal that can be controlled by a pedestrian from the sidewalk or by the motorist tooting his horn. Where under normal operation the signal light at the corner would flash green 30 seconds for traffic moving on Junction avenue and change to red for 20 seconds for cross traffic, the experimental device permits a constant green light for traffic on the main highway unless a pedestrian or motorist desires to cross on Rich street. A control at the curb enables the pedestrian to change the light from green to red while a motorist may change it by tooting his horn from the spot where he must stop before crossing the main thoroughfare. When the horn is sounded, the vibration strikes a transmitter which effects the change in the light. A horn sounded by a motorist on the main thoroughfare has no effect. After a motorist has sounded the horn the light will remain green for him just 20 seconds before swinging back to red against traffic on the cross street again. The pedestrian also wins 20 seconds "right of way" by manipulating the lever.
