MARKED DECLINE IN IMMIGRATION

By ANDRUE BERDING
ROME, April 18 (AP)—The great river of Italian emigration, which poured a flood of new citizens into the United States, South America and southern France in the last two generations, is gradually being dammed at its source by the Mussolini government. Examination of figures just published shows that not only is the number of emigrants from Italy to other countries steadily diminishing, but also that the number of emigrants who are returning to the fatherland to resume citizenship is increasing. This effect springs from two causes, both having their origin in the premier. Mussolini strongly discourages emigration, partly by moral suasion and even more so by legal measures which forbid Italians to leave the country without government permission. Then through propaganda, he tells Italians abroad that under changed conditions in their homeland they can live better and more happily than when they left it. In 1913, the year before the World War, Italian emigration had reached the amazing figure of 872,598 in one year, or almost two per cent of the total population. Thus the population of a great city equal to that of Naples removed itself bodily in one year from one country and scattered itself among a number of others. After the war this outpouring went on again. In 1920 some 416,000 Italians sought homes in other lands. The first years of Fascism, when it was uncertain what the future of the new regime would be, the figure remained high—391,000 in 1923. But from then on there followed a constant reduction—292,000 for 1925; 270,000 for 1926, and 238,000 for 1927. This last year, it is believed, the number fell below 200,000—although official figures have not yet appeared—and a great part of this number is made up of persons who have emigrated for only a short time and must return to Italy. At the same time the number of "repatriates" has become impressively large. In 1920 this number was 80,000. In 1925 it was 211,000 in 1926 198,000 and in 1927, 171,000. The difference between the figures of the emigrants and the repatriates is what counts. The emigrants are still larger in number than the repatriates, but this difference is yearly growing smaller. In 1925 it was 81,000; in 1926, 72,000; in 1927, 67,000. Thus Mussolini is building up the population of his elongated country. By rigidly prohibiting birth control, by rewarding parents of large families, by his own example—he has four children himself—by discouraging emigration and encouraging reentry into Italy, he is forcing Italy's population up by leaps and bounds.

PAIR TAKEN TO CARSON FOR NARCOTICS POSSESSION

John W. Campbell and Samuel Mittleman, two men who were caught with morphine in their possession in the Charleston hotel April 8, were taken to Carson City Tuesday and yesterday by Deputy U. S. Marshall W. L. Lewis, being driven by automobile by W. J. Hopper, U. S. Commissioner. They left this city at 2 p. m. Tuesday. They were committed to state prison April 10.
