MAIL CARRIER WORKS 17 YEARS

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 20. (AP)—Horses, wagons and autos may come and go but Willis F. Colwell, rural free delivery carrier for Cumberland Hill, goes on indefinitely.

During his 21 years on his route the longest in the state, he has bade farewell to three horses two wagons and 17 automobiles, all of which did their bit in the service Colwell, alone, has weathered the wear and tear of the years. He still is a hard specimen, speaks of his work as a "joy ride," and is proud of the fact that his long record shows only two days' interruption in service.

Big Bridge, Not Yet Finished, to Be Torn Down

Because it was discovered that some of the steel cables had broken, this big new suspension bridge between Providence and Newport, R. I., now 85 per cent completed, must be dismantled and new cables installed. Already workmen are cutting the 50,000 rivets that hold the steel together and when they finish dismantling practically nothing but the towers will be left standing. The parts will be stored and re-erected later.
