WON BY PENNINGTON

Fred Pennington won the picture given away by the High School Art Guild Thursday, holding the lucky number "96." Early in the week Mr. Pennington was persuaded to purchase three tickets by Miss Marjorie Gifford, one of the students. "Which numbers do you want," asked Miss Gifford. "You pick out three," said Fred. Which proves that Fred showed excellent judgment. The picture is a beautiful view of California Eucalyptus trees.

MOM'N POP

Child Welfare

Established and equipped. Clinics and conferences are held regularly. School nurses have been hired. Research work is done, and schools or classes held where mothers and expectant mothers may receive help and instruction along child care, and pre-natal care.

The State has done part of its share by collecting statistics, by inspecting water supplies, by school inspections, and by pure food and drug laws. Even so, there is still a tremendous lot of work which the state could accomplish, if the people only knew the need for it.

Local aspect in Las Vegas is only just beginning. A conference was held a year or so ago, during which Miss Withers and Doctor Ferguson examined pre-school children for serious defects. Since then, parents have done all that they can in having these defects corrected and in aiding the child so that when he entered school he could do so with improved health.

At the beginning of the year, school examinations were held with the result that many students have had tonsils and adenoids removed, and have had other defects corrected.

With the younger generation, that is, High School students, growing up and taking their part in the government of the city, Child Welfare should take a decided leap forward.

III. Laws on Child Welfare, Child Hygiene, Child Labor, Child National and Local.

As yet there have been no national laws on child labor. Repeated efforts have been made to have an amendment made to the Consitution which will regulate the hours which children may work, the type of work they may do, and to provide for proper supervision and instruction. An amendment which must pass three-fourths of the state legislatures has so far failed to be passed. However, there is a definite need for reforms along this line, and I hope that it is only a matter of a little time until measures are passed.

Many states have laws which try to remedy this situation. However, the lack of pressure from the public and conditions in various portions of the country have prohibited anything that would really give a great deal of aid.

Six years after the first bill proposing a Children's Bureau, such a bureau was created by an act of Congress approved April 9, 1912. The United States was the first nation, as far as is known, to create a Government bureau which would be devoted entirely to the interests of children. Now, many other countries have followed and enlarged on this example.

Among these are Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Italy, Mexico, Peru, Russia and Yugoslavia.

The purpose set for the Children's Bureau was large. The bureau was instructed to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children employment, legislation affecting children in the several states and territories.

So, you can see that the Children's Bureau has an immense amount of work cut out for itself when you consider that the number of children under 18 years in the United States is almost 43,000,000 which is a decided increase over the number of the census of 1910.

In developing a scientific method of collecting and analyzing facts in the field of child welfare, the bureau has done much pioneer work. How much work they have accomplished is shown by the conditions that existed before its first comprehensive study in infant mortality.

Before the creation of the bureau, the birth-registration area had not been established by the Bureau of the Census. In only eight States was there a system of birth registration that by any stretch of the imagination could be called even approximately complete.

There was no way to find out how many babies died during birth, how many died during the first year of life, or the causes of death. Since that time, though, it is compulsory for every birth and death to be registered, and, in the case of death, a definite cause must be given for the death.

By the collection of this data, one may see at a glance, the birth rate, and death rate in the United States as pertains to Children, and it is possible to investigate the causes and present a cure. By knowing these facts, especially in regards to the death first during birth and during the first year of life, the mothers will naturally become interested and will want to know the best way to care for their children, not only after birth, but also pre-natal care.

All data which the Bureau collects is available to anyone who desires to take the time to read it. The bureau has made public the results of its studies by printing and distributing the facts collected and the conclusions drawn. It also prepares and distributes leaflets and folders designed particularly for mothers, simple in wording and scientific in content. In this way, mothers may put the information into practical use in growing healthy and robust children.

The Federal Children's Bureau cooperates with the States in promoting child welfare. In many cases, various State departments have asked the bureau to study the State's work for children and to suggest methods of improving it, which proves that some people are interested and realize the importance of the matter.

IV. Reason and Explanation of Sheppard-Towner Act, When It Approximately Began and When Operation Ceases.

The Children's Bureau is vested with the responsibility of administering the maternity and infancy act of November 23, 1921, which has been commonly known as the Sheppard-Towner Act. Under this bill, forty-five States, and Hawaii are working with the Federal Government in promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy.

The act was extended to Hawaii in 1924. The original act authorized an annual appropriation for five years, but a resolution extended this authorization for two years, providing that after June 30, 1929, the act shall be of no further force and effect. This resolution was passed in January, 1927, and an annual appropriation of $1,252,080. This amount is apportioned to the Children's Bureau for Federal administration, and to the States and Hawaii. Five thousand dollars is given to each state outright and an additional five thousand dollars to each provided the sum is matched by the State. The rest is distributed in the proportion that the population of each State bears to the total population of the United States if the sum is matched by the State.

Though the details of the work differ in different States, the aim is still fundamentally the same. The work is primarily for mothers living in the smaller cities and in rural areas, because large cities already have hospitals, doctors, nurses, and health departments. All the States are seeking to teach the public how better care of mothers and babies will save lives, and improve health and to stimulate such local and individual interest in the program that the work, once started, will be carried on by the local community itself.

Operations of the Sheppard-Towner Act will cease in 1929 which will again leave the problem to be solved. It is certain that the best work could not be accomplished without some aid from the Federal Government. Just how the situation will be remedied remains to be seen.

V. Summary, with Suggestions for Improvements.

That Child Welfare is a national international problem we have already discussed and it is only necessary to touch lightly upon this phase.

Just because our forefathers didn't bother with Child Welfare is no sign that we should deny its helpful work to our children and to posterity. The world is changing every day. Methods, customs, traditions, all are being revolutionized. Therefore, let us be broadminded and be willing to accept this new idea of Child Welfare. It may sound silly, but when you really understand what a great amount of good it is trying to do, and what a benefit it is, you will become more easily convinced that it is necessary. It is a local aspect that is going to do the most toward promoting the cause. If enough cities, small towns, and counties demand legislation, and insist upon further aid, the Federal Government will have to give in some time.

The States are just beginning to make up to the situation. In many cases conditions have been completely changed. New laws have been passed and new standards have been raised. However, the States are unable to completely remedy it, and must have some help from the Federal Government.

Education is the only way in which we wake the people to the problem. Let Child Welfare be taught in schools, not only High School but Grammar School and in the Universities. In clubs for both men and women, present the topic at every possible chance and from every possible angle, and it won't be long until they are thinking about it. And when you get people to thinking about Child Welfare, then you are going to find a remedy for everything.
