(Continued From Page Four) pletion that the woman "so beautiful that she was the talk of the town" was Iris Moran. Moran took his seat on the opposite side of the flat-topped desk, and reached for the thick sheaf of papers which Nan had been pretending to study. His hand touched hers, inadvertently, then closed over it. "Why, Nan, dear, your hand's like ice," he exclaimed, instantly solicitous. "Aren't you wailing, child? Or did something I say upset you? ... Good heavens, Nan! It's-it's not Crawford's name that's made you look like that, is it? ... I used to think-why, I even teased you about him! Look at me, Nan!" he commanded sternly. Involuntarily the sleek, brown head jerked up, a pair of great brown eyes, blazing with anger, raked his suddenly perturbed and anxious face. "Bert Crawford!" Nan flung the words at him. "You think I ever cared the snap of my finger for that-that?" She bit back the word "crook" just in time. Why disillusion him now, when she had prodded him all these months?-that lady-killer! she amended, but the force of her vehement protest was spoiled. "Oh, John, how stupid how blind you are! Bert Crawford! I could laugh! I could laugh myself sick!" she went on hysterically, and proved by bursting into a wild fit of laughter whose final high note broke into a sob. "Nan, garring? What is the matter? I don't understand-" "Let me go!" she jerked her hand from his, and sprang up from the desk so precipitately that she overturned her chair. Before he could circle the desk she was through the door. The slam of its closing was like a slap in his face, but what did she care now? It was all over, she sobbed, as she fled up the stairs to her room. Hadn't she known all evening that she couldn't go on any longer? Let him think that his insult had driven her away. Let him think anything he chose. It didn't matter. ... All that mattered-she told herself, as she jerked open the door of her clothes closet-was that she had reached the end of her rope. She was through, through! She had tried her best and she had failed. What if they did still need her? She was sick unto death of thinking of them all the time, of crucifying her love every day on the cross of self-sacrifice. She was cramming dresses into a suitcase when a low knock interrupted her. Her heart leaped. Oh, couldn't she ever learn not to hope? Let him knock! ... Slowly, jerkily, she crept toward the door to open to her husband. (To Be Continued)
