Age Story Brings Man From Beatty To Make Purchase

FOR SALE

On the strength of researches conducted under the auspices of Mr. Wittwer of the Clark County farm bureau and a story about these purchases in a recent issue of the Age, John Duff, rancher near Beatty, drove 119 miles to Las Vegas to attend to the matter of buying a ton of phosphate fertilizer.

A carload of this fertilizer recently was shipped to Clark county, and is in storage at Logandale, from which point it is being distributed to the farmers who desire it.

Experiments showed this type of fertilizer to be most effective and also most economical. Dells was in Las Vegas early this week.

Innocent Cheat

By Ruth Dewey Groves

AUTHOR OF "RICH GIRL—POOR GIRL," ETC.

THIS HAS HAPPENED Helen Page feels indebted to and in love with her guardian, Leonard Brent. The latter changes his plans for her future after meeting a dying beggar, Nellin, and tells the girl she is heiress of a millionaire named Cunningham. Brent takes her to the lovely old man and offers, through which Cunningham accepts without question, as he had been searching for his dead daughter's child for years.

Among Helen's new friends are Eva Ennis and her brother Robert. Brent fears Helen may fall in love with Bob and plots to win her quickly, especially after finding another locket like the one he had taken from Nellin to prove Helen the heiress. Hearing that a sudden shock would kill Cunningham, Brent slyly administers it, and the servants find the old man dead in bed. Then, by clever acting and appeal to her loyalty, Brent wins Helen's promise to marry him.

Later she and Bob discover their love for each other, but she tells him she is engaged. Helen tries to break with Brent, but he refuses to release her and makes dire threats if she dares to marry Bob. Eva resents Helen's treatment of Bob, which has driven him to flirting with shallalmar Morris. She scolds him, and he laughs at her, saying Helen is engaged to Brent. Eva collapses and admits that Brent has been making love to her. Bob goes to tell Helen the kind of end she is engaged to, and while he is there an urgent call comes from his mother. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XL Helen ran to the telephone. Mrs. Ennis would not call her on a trivial matter, she knew. It must concern Eva.

"This is Miss Nellin—Helen," she cried when she picked up the receiver. What is it, Mrs. Ennis? The voice that came back to her in answer was fraught with fear. "Is Bob there?" it asked.

"Yes, yes," Helen said. "Do you want to talk with him?" "Please," the voice was growing fainter.

"It is your mother," Helen looked up at Bob, who had followed close upon her exit from the breakfast room, and her expression frightened him.

"What is it?" he asked hoarsely. Helen did not answer and he repeated the question over the wire. "What's wrong, mother?"

"Oh, come home soon, at once," she entreated him. "I don't know what's the matter with Eva. She is—she is—"

"I'll be there right away," Bob jumped up, not stopping even to put the receiver back on the hook. "We'll take my car; it's faster," Helen said, hastening along beside him.

"Mine's at the door," Bob reminded her. "So is mine. I was going to drive over and find out why Eva went home so early this morning."

True, the car was at the door. They lost not an unnecessary second in getting it started and heading toward the highway. Helen had taken the wheel because she felt safety to drive as fast as he'd have dared alone.

Knowing every foot of the road gave Helen supreme confidence. In her mind and in Bob's was the same thought. Eva was desperate. One could tell what she would do, both knew, a temperamental fire. It was revealed in her music, in all that she did and said that was of herself and did not touch intimately upon the rest of the world.

Suddenly, a few blocks away from the house, Helen brought the car to a full stop. She was white and shaking.

"I can't drive the rest of the way," she said. "It's—too terrible."

She did not say all that was in her mind; did not tell the distraught brother how ghastly it seemed to her that they should have mended their broken love affair as a result of Eva's disillusionment.

Bob raised himself while Helen moved her chair in a caressing hair, saying nothing, waiting for the confidence she'd prayed her girl would give her.

"I can't live without him," Eva went on, clinging closer, hurting with her slender fingers. "He was him—and he isn't for me. He was never for me. I know it. Bob says my dearest friend—oh I hate her, he is going to marry Helen—Helen—I can't help it. I can't help anything. I can't stand it. I can't! I can't! I can't!"

She was growing hysterical. "Hush, hush, dear," Mrs. Ennis pleaded. "You have frightened me nearly to death. Please, dear, don't make me suffer any more."

For Eva's own sake she was appealing to her sympathy, knowing, as she did the surest way to rule the girl.

short of a complete lack of self-control. She began to cry normally, helplessly—as Mrs. Ennis put it to herself.

For uncounted moments she cried and cried, with her mother making soothing noises over her, but offering no word to distract her from the relief of tears.

Helen had waited downstairs. She had much to say to each other but neither could put it into words with the weight of Eva's so nearly tragic fate hanging over them.

They stood by a window, watching the scurrying leaves in the bit of restricted garden at the side of the house. Bob's arm was about Helen. She leaned against him and lost herself in the wonder of their love.

Presently Mrs. Ennis came down to them. Her eyes were red and swollen but there were signs of the calm that follows a storm in her half-smile and her general air.
