Griffith Building Planned: Excavation for the new building planned by Mrs. E. W. Griffith for the corner of Second and Fremont streets, begun Friday morning.

The plans for the structure show a two-story concrete building, with store rooms fronting on Fremont street and a hall and apartment above. The front will be of plate glass and concrete block construction.

This handsome structure will be a substantial and much needed improvement to Vegas. The construction of the superstructure will be pushed immediately upon completion of the excavation.

F. & A. M. Elects Officers: The annual election of officers of Logges Lodge No. 32, F. & A. M., took place Monday evening, the following being elected:

W. M. W. R. Thomas; S. W. W. B. M. M. J. J. W. Dr. W. S. Park; secretary, F. A. Bui; treasurer, Ed Von Tobel.

New School at Arden: Contractor William Marshall has taken the contract for building a school house 25 to 36 feet in size at Arden. The structure will be of metal lath and plaster construction, surrounded by a porch and a five feet cement walk on all sides.

Adjoining the main structure will be a cottage 12x20 feet in size for the use of the teacher.

Searchlight Oil Field: A column and a third description of the so-called Searchlight oil field was contained in this issue of The Age. It says in part:

"This area comprising the Kerwin oil structure covers a territory approximately fifteen miles in length by ten in width and lies back both on eastward and westward banks of the Colorado river about fifteen miles east of Searchlight, Nev., and approximately thirty miles west of Chloride, Ariz., and easily reached by auto from either place over a good all-year-round highway."

Searchlight, the terminus of the Santa Fe branch, may be considered the natural gateway to the field for all kinds of transportation—truck, team or auto.

Also stage lines make connections with trains on the Salt Lake line at Nipton, 24 miles west of Searchlight.

The Colorado River Oil and Gas company has leased half of their holdings in this field to Texas oil operators on royalty basis. They have agreed within sixty days to erect a standard rig and begin operations in the field.

A mounted O'Kell drill capable of reaching a depth of 2,000 feet, has been purchased and is now on the way from Searchlight to the field.

NEW YORKER AT LARGE

NEW YORK—A rash of retirements has broken out on Broadway. Eddie "The Topper" now on tour, will mark the conclusion of his career as a stage comedian, and Al Jolson, who hasn't answered a curtain call in two years, follows suit by averting that he, too, is through with the stage.

So be it, Jolson, to all intents and purposes, retired from the stage the moment he found out, via "The Jazz Singer," that he was a success in the warblers. And one needn't overstrain his eyes Hollywoodward to discern in that direction the reason for Cantor's retirement.

It might, however, be a good idea to give either boy-hay-wagon room if any New York producer raises his voice above a whisper to offer $60,000 a week for a good funny man.

The Big Parade Cantor and Jolson both are honest enough in their intention to retire, and likely as not neither will be seen again in person as the star of a stage production.

The real reason for the retirement of both is the monotony of the stage as contrasted with the comparative ease of making a movie. And the two comics aren't the first to find out that Hollywood offered surcease.

John Barrymore couldn't act a role to satisfy himself unless he lived it, and by the time a play was six weeks old he was beside himself with tension. He went to Hollywood, where when he'd acted a part well once he was through with it forever.

Ina Claire quit the stage for the same reason. Elsie Janis dodged musical shows and stayed in vaudeville because she found herself having the songs she sang after a month or so. In vaudeville she could change her act, or chuck it all and take a two-month vacation in Egypt.

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne like the Theater Guild, and spurn offers from other producers, partly because the Guild lets them do two or three roles a year, whereas in other impresario's hits they'd have to play the same parts two years or more.

Portrait: Marie Jeritza, the opera star, does card tricks, goes to three motion picture shows in an evening, keeps her dressing room at the Metropolitan filled with dolls and is always forgetting things in taxicabs.

She chews gum at rehearsals, and before she goes onstage at a performance she drinks the juice of two cans of pineapple, giving the fruit to the ballet girls.

She never sings "without white gloves on her hands, and before going onto the stage she always makes the sign of the cross. She carries hard candies about with her, and sometimes in the middle of a role, while her back is to the audience, she slips one into her mouth.

Critical Note That recalls the utterly irrelevant instance, funny nevertheless, of the critic who didn't like the actress in "The Donovan Affair."

"They were looking," he wrote, "for the missing pearls, and from Miss —'s diction one suspected that she had them in her mouth."

ON THE SIDELINES by BRIAN BELL

Harry A. Williams, president of the Pacific Coast league, predicts that ultimately the "split season" plan in baseball will be adopted by all leagues, including the majors.

The split season plan is to divide the season into two parts and if different clubs win, have a play-off at the close of the season for the championship.

"This statement," said Mr. Williams, a former newspaper man, "no doubt will cause more than one smile tinged with skepticism, for it sounds revolutionary in the extreme, but I am willing that the scoffers should paste it in a convenient place for future reference."

"Nothing which brings legitimate results can permanently be ignored. It is certain of ultimate universal recognition and utilization. The divided season has brought results in the Pacific Coast league, an organization a shade below the majors, and one of the three highest minors, making it in my opinion the ideal circuit for a test which is really representative of baseball. Baseball men who are frank and analytical freely admit that baseball as a whole has new and changing conditions to meet as well as increasing competition. Unlike industrialists and great amusement concerns, it has done little to meet these conditions."

opposed indiscriminate splitting of the season without adequate safeguard. This safeguard he submitted can be provided through the medium of a cash bonus to be awarded the club which wins both halves, or be played for on a 60 and 40 per cent basis of division, should different clubs win the first and second half.

The players should not share in the receipts of any play-off but the bonus must be large enough to provide every incentive for a club to win both halves, if possible, and to win the play-off if one is necessary.

"After all, the so-called split season is but two short seasons instead of one long one," said Williams, "and I know of no argument which can be advanced against two short seasons with their great dramatic possibilities and the danger of a drab situation reduced to a minimum. Too, it is the fairest system of settling baseball championships."

It does not handicap the club leading at the end of the first half, he claimed, for that club wins the first season and is then placed on an equality with the other clubs at the start of the second season.

But even if it did handicap one club he would still be for it, for one to four clubs have suffered unfavorable training weather and been handicapped at the start of the race.

"This is not the age of endurance contests," said Williams in closing his argument, "the marathan footrace, which flourished for a time, suffered a timely and deserved death."
