GUIDING YOUR CHILD

By MRS. AGNES LYNE THE TEACHER. Anyone who has observed children at work in the classroom knows that certain teachers have the happy faculty of easily engaging the interest and winning the respect of their pupils. Others, no less well prepared for their task, or less intelligent, have the greatest difficulty in maintaining discipline and in getting children to do their best. It is the teacher's personality that makes all the difference. Not all teachers are temperamentally fitted for their task. Men and women frequently choose teaching as a profession because it brings a fairly good salary and long summer vacations, because they are afraid to enter into business competition or take any chances in making their way. To become a teacher it is only necessary to do certain prescribed work, to pass certain examinations and obtain a certificate or license. In consequence, there are many intellectually able, licensed teachers who are wholly unfitted for the task of dealing with boys and girls. Since success in teaching depends so much upon the personal equation, it is highly important that the teacher be an individual who has chosen her occupation chiefly because she likes it. It is important, too, that she possess a happy, well poised personality. Your child's teacher, in other words, needs to be not only intellectual and technically fitted for her work, but also she needs to be a mature, cultivated human being who gets particular pleasure from helping children to live and learn.

New Irrigation Work Is Planned For Ancient One

Job Started Over 1000 Years Ago in Chinese Province. PEIPING, Jan. 9 (AP)—The Chinese International Famine Relief Commission announces that it is about to undertake a new $900,000 (silver) irrigation project in famine stricken Shensi province, continuing an engineering job begun more than 1,000 years ago. The plan is to divert the waters of the King River 25 miles from Shian, the capital of the province, so that they will irrigate 100,000 acres. But although all of the resources and skill of modern science will be utilized, the project itself was started a millennium ago by Chinese engineers who constructed a canal for this same purpose. This old canal was used for centuries and has itself deeply eroded the rock and soil before it finally collapsed. The new project, which will also be used for irrigation work in Shensi, but floods destroyed them and the region has had to depend only upon natural springs for its water supply. Only a few weeks more of work will be needed next spring to complete the $750,000 (silver) Yellow River irrigation project, which the Famine Relief Commission has been working upon in Suiyuan province, and then the organization will send its engineers and machinery to start the new and bigger undertaking in Shensi.

South American Markets Of U. S. Are Seen As Target Of Russ-Italian Trade Pact

ROME, Jan. 9 (AP)—South American markets, which some observers think are slipping away from the United States, are seen here as one motivating influence of the new Russian-Italian commercial accord. Thus far that motive is in the background, but it is expected to come more clearly into the picture in 1931. The channel for this development is expected to be a second trade treaty between the fascist and soviet governments. Negotiations for this are understood to be already under way. First Pact Unilateral. The necessity for a second accord is discovered in the peculiar terms of the first pact, signed a few months ago. The strange part of that agreement is that it is almost entirely unilateral. It provides for Russian purchases, but disregards what Italy may need from the soviet union. By it Russia binds herself to buy Italian-manufactured goods to the value of 200,000,000 lire (roughly $10,000,000) by June 30, 1931. It includes an extension clause raising this amount to 300,000,000 in the second year and 500,000,000 in the third if the pact is given that additional life. Italian Imports Increase. Adherence to the strict letter of this pact would place Russia in the position of forfeiting any chance for a favorable balance in her trade with Italy. But a second, reciprocal pact would wipe out this contingency. The ground for this second agreement is rapidly being prepared. Already imports from Russia are increasing, particularly in coal, oil, lumber and ore, the raw materials of which Italy stands ever in need. Russia's purchases are on 25-year credits, backed by the Italian government and a banking syndicate. They include machinery, automobiles, tractors, airplanes, chemicals and fertilizers. But the biggest slice is shipping. A fourth of the first year's buying must be merchant tonnage. That fact is the thread by which observers connect the Russian treaty with the campaign for South American markets. More Italian Ships. Of late years Italy has launched a number of fast ships which ply between this country and South American ports. She also is engaged in a campaign of advertising across the South Atlantic. With her industries plentifully supplied by Russian raw materials, she sees herself able to compete with the United States in the manufacture of goods, carried in Italian ships and handled by enthusiastic expatriates who have identified themselves with South American life. Meanwhile she hopes her present agreement with Moscow will enable her factories at least to "keep the wheels turning." She is paying little attention to foreign comment about the strange economic union with a country which, politically, is entirely opposed to the theories and methods of the Mussolini system.

Hawks Gives Air Honors To Costes-Smith

NEW YORK, Jan. 9 (AP)—Captain Frank M. Hawks, American speed flier, hands two foreign fliers the aeronautical accomplishment laurels for 1930. He nominated Charles Kingsford-Smith, as the greatest pilot of the year, and the trans-atlantic flight of Diemond Costes as the year's most spectacular air journey. Kingsford-Smith has to his credit his perfect jump over the Pacific, his dangerous journey from Australia to England, his flight from Ireland to Newfoundland, and thence to New York, and finally his solo jaunt from England back to Australia. "Viewing flights, spectacular flights, that is, I believe the trip of Diemond Costes and Maurice Belton westward across the Atlantic was the most thrilling of the year. It had expert piloting and navigation combined in brilliant and extremely adventurous spectacle." As to the prospect for 1931, Captain Hawks wants to see all airplane schedules advance to 150 miles an hour cruising speed. "We can have that," he said, "if the designers will get out their pencils and give us something more in the way of a new airplane rather than just refinements on present ones." Such a speed regularly maintained would bring the transcontinental passenger and mail service into the 24-hour margin, as against the day and a half now required for such service, Hawks believes. Fog remains as the greatest danger to aviation, Hawks said, although he said that safety depends on the pilot to the extent of 90 per cent. More efficient fliers would be developed, he declared, if every pilot was his own navigator and radio operator.
