By MRS. AGNES LYNE PROBLEMS OF YOUTH

Most of us in looking back over the past cannot help but feel that the 'teens were the most difficult

I, was then that we became aware of the conflict between the life of our own generation and the behavior which our elders expected of us. It was then that we know our most intense religious experiences, our most painful doubts and the necessity, never again so urgent for finding some ideal order in the universe. Nothing was settled for us. From standards of conduct which surrounded us on every hand, we somehow had to evolve an order and philosophy of our own. Any swiftly changing society must put upon its youth this excessive burden. Social conditions in our own country have never changed more quickly than during the last few decades. More than ever is it useless to try to hand down to children any set patterns of belief and conduct Not matter whether we like it, the conditions of modern life make it necessary for youths to make their own choices. All we can do is to prepare them to choose as wisely as possible. We can set before them the example of mature, self-disciplined adults, who courageously meet their own life problems. We can free them to meet their problems in the light of their own experience helped always by a feeling of security and sympathy in the home environment. Such a program should prevent at least some of the conflicts and mistakes for which youth pays so heavily in wasted years and energy. It should to a large extent prevent false starts and irrevocable commitments to courses which must bring too heavy penalties.
