She is the U.S. navy submarine O-12, rebuilt to sail under the ice of the North pole next summer carrying an 18-man scientific ex-pedition led by Sir Hubert Wilkins. She looks like a steel fish humpbacked, round - belifed. Her snub nose is armed with a long horn. She has two queer fins over her back and one under her spake-like tail

The back fins are a trolley for running under the ice and a jackknife periscope waich folds back when she strikes floes. The tall fit is a framework guarding the profilm substitutes. Many people will peller blades and rudder from ice. Her back is a pair of steel run-ners, arching from nose to stern. Under their protection are house her old conning tower, a new con-ning towner that can be thrust upward to bore through 13 feet of ice, a diver's chamber and a fixed deck ght forward.

There also are two slender, vertical pipes aft, out of which two hollow, boring shafts can be extended upward through 100 feet of ice.

They are air intake and exhaust.

This location is chosen in hopes of finding layers of fresh water, resembling the liquid strata suspectd of existing on the surface of the polar sea. Fresh water, a boon any other crew of salt mariners, a hazard to the men of a sub.
