YOUR BRAIN and YOUR HEA! TH

By DR. LELAND B. ALFORD

PROVERBS Proverbs enjoy perennial favor. Apparently every season adds to their number and an old one is never discarded as obsolete. Books of proverbs contain literally thousands of these pithy assurances.

Such a book is a rather depressing commentary on the longings, herdships and injustices of the world. It speaks of pain more often than of pleasure.

There is scarcely an optimistic proverb about laughter. The man who laughs is proverbially feelish-Laughter is the hiccup of the fool."

Yet from a common-sense view-point what is more helpful in life than lots of laughter? The proverb only reflects the ingrained pessimism of man (but perhaps not of

For some reason there is a prejudice against talking. "Great talkers are commonly liars." "Silence is a fine jewel for a woman but is little worn." Assuredly there is nothing inherently had about talk- Carolyn Wells.

Dark Eyes of London — Edgar

The sentiments anent worry are all commendable. They should be taught to children. "Don't climb the hill until you get to it." "The great-est fool is he who worries about what he cannot help." The proverb is as good and as bad as human nature. Although it wears the airs of authority and finality it still is only a human product. Many truths are contained in proverbs, but so are many false-

Fsychologically the proverb mo-mentarily satisfies the familiar "quest for certainty." We are forever seeking the final and certain in all interests. This quest is an excellent one but the proverb is only an epiate that stupifies rather than feeds.

We are far too apt to be influenced by past statements. The reaction is psychological. Since they pose as being final, we must go to all the trouble of reopening the question and incur the risk of a denial. There is no easy way of meeting them.

Trade in Shears For Curling Iron Fashion's Tip on Spring Coiffure

This coiffure, by Saks-Fifth Avenue, reveals the spring mode, which hairdressers say will call for longer bobs, curled up at the ends. Small curls will be particularly smart for evening.

NEW YORK, March 4. (A)-Don't buy the spring hat, madame, until you've made up your mind about your spring hair.

The best thought in New York hairdressing circles is for cutting sparingly and curling plenty.
