

WEDDING GUESTS ARE UNSEEN IN TELEVISION BROADCAST

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD
 (Associated Press Radio Editor)
 NEW YORK, May 14 (AP)—When television gets well under way there is little doubt that it will add many accomplishments to the long radio list.

Already it is making strides in that direction as New York joins Chicago and other cities with sight and sound broadcasts somewhat on the order of a radio talkie.

The radio audience of WGBS, 254 meters, which is now televising part of its regular programs from its new Fifth avenue studios from 5 to 7 p. m. (EST) each day, and there are additional picture features from 2 to 4 in the afternoon. A section of the early program consists of films.

The sound-sight combination seems to have gotten off to a pretty good start, observers reporting picture reception at considerable distances.

The radio talkie is achieved by placing the microphone and the television camera in the same studio.

The electric camera now in use at WGBS at present is in two sections. One is made up of two banks of photo-electric cells placed near the entertainer who stands in a square beam of light thrown upon him or her by a machine known to engineers as the "flying spot."

TWO RECEIVERS NEEDED

The "flying spot" has an arc lamp to produce light which is passed through a scanning disk and a lens upon the camera, or person being televised.

The light is then reflected to the photo cell for radio transmission by equipment not unlike that used for sound broadcasts.

The microphone also is close at hand, and can be seen in the received picture. The "micro" feeds the regular broadcast transmitter.

Thus two receivers are required to pick up a radio wave in its entirety—a short wave set for sight and a broadcast outfit for sound.

Outside of the new things that can be done by radio with the aid of television, the studio technique, including the proper make-up, lighting, and so on, is an experimental nature as yet.

OLDEST AUTO SAID LOCATED

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 14 (AP)—An automobile that was sold when the "gay nineties" were young has been titled by the Pennsylvania Bureau of Motor Vehicles.

The car, a roadster model, was built by James E. Hill, of Fleetwood. In an affidavit Hill declared that he constructed the "infernal machine" in 1868 as an experiment.

LICENSED IN 1905

He also asserts that about 1905 he received a State permit allowing him to drive the car. The machine was sold to Daniel S. Shadel, of Fleetwood, in 1922, who is the present owner.

The bureau has declined to license tags for the car because its equipment fails to meet the present standard of safety as required by the State Vehicle Code.

The tires are of iron while the head and tail lamps are but one candle power, due to the fact that there is only room for one candle in each of the lamps. A two-cylinder gasoline engine capable of 7.2 horse-power reposes under the hood of the car.

Hill said he was a stationary engineer in 1868 and built the car for his amusement using a two-cylinder steam engine for power. Fear that the boiler would explode moved him to substitute a gasoline engine for the steam power. About eight different types of gasoline engines were used in the car between 1869 and 1908 when the present motor was installed.

SCREEN LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD

By HUBBARD KEAVY
 HOLLYWOOD—Charlie Chaplin is an obstinate fellow. Whatever the ultimate profit from his silent film "City Lights," his friends are trying to induce him to follow their often-repeated advice and make a talkie.

Marion Davies told me: "Several of us, who are Charlie's closest friends talked to him for hours in an effort to make him see that silent pictures are a thing of the past. But Charlie is as headstrong as they come and won't admit that silent pictures can't be successful."

"We suggested a talking picture with everyone talking in it but himself. It offers unusual possibilities for his type of art, but he disagreed, as usual."

"Charlie needs something to snap him out of his obstinacy."

Chaplin, it is understood here, is giving up his idea of an extended and leisurely tour of the world and will return within a few weeks.

RUTH SATISFIED

It doesn't make any difference to Miss Chatterton where she works. Her new Paramount agreement pays her as much as the one that was destroyed.

The loss of Powell and Miss Francis didn't bother Paramount officials much, but the expected loss of Chatterton, the money-maker, caused them some dismay.

GUIDING YOUR CHILD

By MRS. AGNES LYNE
WHERE CREDIT IS DUE
 A mother was speaking of the remarkable improvement achieved through corrective exercises in the physique of her fourteen-year-old son.

"You have no idea how round-shouldered and flat-chested and spindly he was, even a year ago. And now look at him. He is just as straight as can be. He even made the freshman basketball team this winter!"

The boy listened to this speech with an expression which, interpreted in words, might readily have been:

"What do you mean, my teacher is a wonder! Don't I get any credit? I did all the work. He just stood around and gave orders. If my back is straight, I'm the fellow who straightened it and you might have the decency to say so!"

Even the most well meaning, affectionate parent makes this kind of mistake. If a child has improved in any respect—in punctuality, in reliability, in school work, in his physique, even—they openly credit the teacher, the camp or school to which he was sent, or their own painstaking training. They speak of the improvement over his head, as it were, as if it were something done to him or for him, but toward which he himself has done nothing worthy of recognition.

It is only natural for him to resent this and often it takes nothing more than just such tactless flattery to make him slide back to the undesirable habit which he has only just succeeded in laboriously unlearning.

A child does not mind admitting, perhaps, that he has been helped, but he rightly demands to be given credit for achievements which are after all primarily his own.

LOST CHILDREN'S SEASON ARRIVES

PHILADELPHIA, May 14 (AP)—The busy season for police matrons is nearly here.

In the winter all is calm with the exceptions of a few liquor cases, but with the advent of spring, liquor cases still persist, but are overshadowed by the problem of lost children.

They get lost while shopping with their mothers, police officials said, while playing in the streets, and frequently when taken to a park by an older child who forgets them and goes home without them.

During the past few years, however, there have been few babies abandoned in the city according to veteran police matrons.
