GIANT NEW LINER TO LIGHT FUNNEL FOR NIGHT SAFETY

QUEBEC, May 27. (AP)—The practice of flood-lighting architectural masterpieces has been extended to the sea.
For safety as well as aesthetic purposes towering funnels of the new ocean liner, "Empress of Britain," will be illuminated by powerful lamps which will make the 42,500-ton vessel visible for more than thirty miles, or more than an hour's travel away.
On nights when there is a low "ceiling" the light will form a moving aura on low-hanging clouds above the ship, making its presence discernible at an even greater distance. In all weather the illumination will form a beacon for dirigible or other trans-Atlantic fliers.
The "Empress of Britain" is the equivalent of sixteen stories high from water line to the tops of her three huge stacks, each large enough to hold three Pullman cars. The ship is a city block long. It is expected here on her maiden voyage June 3.

CITIZENSHIP DENIED HERO

SEATTLE, May 27. (AP)—Cause he in the federal dry net because he and the rest of the crew aboard a run rumrun vessel chose to rescue a boatload of people instead of running from an approaching cutter, Iver Silversen has been denied citizenship papers in the United States.
Silversen was second engineer aboard the British schooner Peewee when the ship sighted a boatload of survivors of the Kaoba. The schooner's hold was full of contraband liquor.
This happened in the fall of 1924, and now Silversen finds himself unable to join his wife in Everett. He protests that he was merely employed as second engineer on the vessel, and had no actual part in the liquor dealing. He wants to enter and become a citizen of the United States.
The question whether his heroism is sufficient to cut governmental red tape will be placed before the bureau of immigration at Washington, D. C. Records of a hearing held in Vancouver, B. C., are being held here for transmission to Washington and meanwhile Silversen is waiting in Vancouver, unable to cross the border.

FARMER HEADS RESERVE BANK

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 27. (AP)—Recently appointed agricultural director of the federal reserve board, is first of his new position demands his presence in Washington, still supervising the 1,280-acre ranch near Omaha where he raises blooded livestock, certified seed and fruit. The property has been in the Magee family more than fifty years.
"I really am a dirt farmer," said Magee. "I know soils and I know seeds. I keep in touch with the grain market and I know what the livestock market is doing. A good farmer, you know, has to be just as interested in economics and world affairs now as does a Wall Street broker."
In addition to his duties on the reserve board, his legal profession and work on his Nebraska ranch, Magee is a member of the course grain industry committee of the federal farm board. He is president of the Douglas county (Nebraska) farm bureau and head of the Nebraska crop growers' association.
Magee, the son of a Chicago lawyer, started practicing law in Illinois in 1908. Previously, he had attended school at Chicago University, Northwestern University and University of Monn, in Germany.

SCREEN LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD

By HERBARD HEAVY
HOLLYWOOD, May 27.—Hollywood believes Norma Talmadge is retiring from pictures, despite her announcement that she has offers from producers here and in Europe, one of which she may accept.
Miss Talmadge asked for her release from her contract with United Artists because she could not have the privilege of choosing her own stories. Although her husband, Joseph Schenck, is head of United Artists, the policy of denying contract stars a voice in story selection was not altered.
Band Joseph Schenck is head of United Artists, the policy of denying contract stars a voice in story selection was not altered.
"New York Nights" and "Du Barry," were not nearly as successful as many she made years ago. She felt, it is said, that she could have picked vehicles that would have made better pictures. Neither was outstanding in any sense.
Miss Talmadge has appeared so infrequently in the last few years that she is all but forgotten between pictures. She could make a graceful retirement now; another film or two might force Miss Talmadge to quit.

SPRING POETRY URGE SHOWS ITS EFFECT ON BRITISH AD WRITERS

LONDON, May 27. (AP)—Spring poets are working overtime in Britain today, but instead of singing of love and beauty they are chanting the praise of soups, soups and sandwiches on billboards, in subway stations and on street cars.
Advertising copy-writers, seeking to pry open British pocket-books, have taken to couples, quatrains, trios and sonnets.
The Evening Star, on its front page, created its readers by the following poem in praise of a well-known sauce:
"It's jolly to be wise,
But better to economize,
No more cold meat will be despised,
No more exasperating sighs,
With moistened lips and brightened eyes,
He'll just sit down an appetite,
If you are wise to either size

Where everyone may see is this couplet eulogizing the humble bouillon cube:
"Why does the cook the butcher shock so?
Because she is making her soup of Oxo."
The mighty emperors of the expansion of Empire trade finds its expression in a poster on the outside of a dozen buses:
"Australian currants, raisins and butter.
Wise words for all wise wives to utter."

GUIDING YOUR CHILD

RESPECTING CONVENTIONS
By MRS. AGNES LYNE
As soon as the child is old enough to have a social life apart from the immediate family circle, he becomes sensitive to the conventions of his age group.
To be forced to go to bed regularly at 9 when the other children are already allowed to go to occasional evening shows and parties that last until midnight is to feel that one suffers from an injustice which can only be laid at the door of old fogy notions.
When other boys and girls are allowed to drive the family car, it is outrageous to be treated as unfit for such responsibility.
We may not like the pace of the group to which our boy or girl happens to belong, but to set up our standards in complete disregard of it is to place him under a very real and unhappy handicap.
If unduly the hours, the spending money, the privileges allowed to our children's friends are such that it is impossible for us to make the concessions necessary for our child to feel that he "belongs," then we have no choice but to give him a chance to make friends nearer to our liking by moving to another neighborhood or by sending him to another school.
Usually, however, such radical measures are unnecessary. The child can be helped to work out a happy adjustment between the value which his home is trying to inculcate and those which he must in some measure accept from his friends if he is to live through a normal adolescence.
A 16-year-old may willingly consent to the 9 o'clock bedtime rule if it is agreed that once a week he may stay up as late as need be to attend a party or a show.
It is a question of compromise and common sense concessions on both sides.

STATE POLICE WILL NOT BE MILITARY

SALEM, Ore., May 27. (AP)—Oregon's new state police will not be a military body.
The state police act, overwhelmingly passed by the last legislature and effective July 1, was patterned after the laws of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Governor Julius L. Meier declared.
"Since announcement that Brigadier-General Smedley D. Butler would aid in organization of the department, propaganda was broadcast by a few disgruntled politicians that it was to be military," the governor pointed out.
"The statement was without foundation. I had not the slightest intention of converting the state police into a military organization."
Shortly after Butler's acceptance of Governor Meier's invitation to come here, a movement was launched to invoke the referendum against the measure.
NOT TO SELECT MEN
"General Butler is an authority on police work," Meier said. "I secured his services to obtain his practical advice and views in connection with organizing our state police. He will have nothing to do with selection of the personnel, and his recommendation will be followed only where they may be applicable to conditions in this state."
The famous marine leader's views will not be entirely acceptable to Governor Meier.
In dispatches, Butler was quoted as favoring only unmarried men in the personnel of police system. The governor, however, told United Press it would be Oregon's policy to retain in the new system all qualified men.
"I believe that whether an applicant for a position in the state police be married or unmarried should make no difference," he said.
A special committee laying ground work for the new organization, estimated the department would save the state $187,000 during the first two years.

THE FIRST PAPER

"We enjoy your paper very much; and the first paper we read when we come from work is the Age," writes a subscriber.

"I have just one complaint to make about your paper," says another subscriber, "and that is that it is so interesting that it keeps me from getting my work done in the morning."

Are you one of our loyal subscribers? For the small sum of 50 CENTS A MONTH you can receive The Daily Age early each morning, except Monday. Associated Press and United Press dispatches bring you news of the world ahead of any Los Angeles daily, and the news is eight hours later than that contained in the city "bull dog" editions.

We are adding three of the best comics available.

The same popular editorial column by the editor and publisher, Charles C. Squires, for 26 years an active booster for this section.

The same accurate and faithful portrayal of local news happenings, all for the low subscription price of 50 cents a month, by carrier or by mail.
