

Hoops, Bustles And Other Fripperies Gone; Spring Styles Return To Twentieth Century

Gone are muttonleg sleeves from the street costume forecast for early spring—gone also, are hoops and bustles, for fashion is at work with the twentieth century as it is mild and practically as its guide. Colors also have turned practical. There's a hint of the new slim silhouette here.

PARIS, Jan. 18. (AP)—Designs for the early spring styles which Paris shows for the modish modern have stripped them of mid-Victorian fripperies.

Hoops, bustles and muttonleg sleeves are gone. Today's street silhouette is slim, moderately short skirted and suited to the active life of the twentieth century woman.

Colors, too, reflect the demand for practicality.

Navy blue is the primary color on fashion's palette, while a new bright blue akin to royal, champagne and pink beiges, grey and black are outstanding in the picture. Bright tints such as red and green are saved for accessory notes. Belts of the most varied design and construction ever seen in the style world accent early spring models.

Belts seen on spring coats are uniformly narrow and neat, but of saloons in St. Louis, Mo., at those worn on frocks vary in size 1,000 and beer flats at 3,000.

from a finger's width to the breadth of two hands, while materials include fabric and leather.

One design of brown leather, which buttons up the front like a dress, is six inches wide in front and two inches wide in the back, another of black enamel is no thicker than a little finger, and a third of black patent leather stitched in herringbone pattern has a uniform width of six inches.

The new belts may either match or contrast with the color of the frock.

A black belt on a pearl grey frock worn with black hat and shoes, a green belt and cuffs on a brown dress worn with brown hat and gloves and a delft blue belt on a dark blue frock worn with a dark blue hat and a delft blue bag are among the combinations seen.

A recent estimate of federal prohibition officials put the number of saloons in St. Louis, Mo., at those worn on frocks vary in size 1,000 and beer flats at 3,000.

ALFALFA BILL BEARDS LION

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18. (AP)—Gov. William H. Murray amazed a national convention of the Anti-Saloon league to-night by submitting a plan for regional liquor control to the bone dry organization.

Frock-coated, bushy haired, the Oklahoma governor and presidential possibility outlined a "possible" plan by which states that wanted beer and wines could have them and dry-thinking states could remain dry.

His plan would provide for a series of regional liquor treaties among groups of states, dry or wet. Wine and beer states would not be able to ship liquor to, or through dry states.
