U. P. Man Interviews Trunk Slayer

MANHATTAN MIRRORS

NEW YORK, Feb. 12. (U.P.)—"No political talk is permitted here."

That sign hangs in a room in the basement of city hall—a room devoted to New York members of the G. A. R. A couple of old gentlemen sat under the sign today, fighting again the war of their youth.

"Yep," said Mark S. Coxson, who fought at Harper's Ferry. "If they could get another gent like Abe Lincoln in that chair down to Washington people wouldn't have to eat these damned drug store meals."

"I don't ordinarily like to talk about our Presidents," admitted Henry J. Kearny, vice commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., "but as long as this is Abe's birthday I'm going to say I wish to God he was back in Washington."

"I mind the time," continued Coxson, "when he walked past me and I saluted and he says, 'Just like this,' he says, 'How do you do?' And I says, 'How do you do?'"

"All I wish," suggested Kearny, "is that there was a decent saloon around here. We'd go out and drink a toast to his memory."

"As it is," said Coxson, "all we can do is go eat one of those damned drug store meals."

The merchants of Manhattan are willing to testify that, in the last couple of weeks, hoarded money is getting back into circulation.

There's one sure way of telling it. The department stores report that a huge number of the large-sized dollar bills are coming in. That means that people are pulling money out of their mattresses and socks.

A cat and a dog got in a fight today and almost killed Mrs. Elizabeth Duane, of Windsor place.

The dog belonged to Mrs. Duane and the cat came in a window. They went around and around. Mrs. Duane was asleep in an adjoining room. The dog was winning the battle when the cat took refuge on the gas stove. The dog went after his adversary and they scuffled and scratched and snarled over the range, opening all the gas jets.

When Mrs. Duane's brother-in-law came in he found the cat dead on the range. Mrs. Duane was unconscious. A police emergency squad revived her. The dog, Rex, didn't even become ill.

One of the broadcasting companies is arranging a unique stunt. Mary Pickford will be in the New York studio. Doug Fairbanks will be in the South Sea islands. The broadcast will be a conversation between the pair and it is reported they will realize $10,000 on it.
