EPOCHAL ACHIEVEMENT

AGES MAY come and go before another achievement so outstanding in the annals of engineering and construction as driving the four great diversion tunnels through the solid rock at Hoover dam site is accomplished.

Frank T. Crowe, through his genius for organization and accomplishment, has forced the excavation of those stupendous bores in approximately half the time the work was expected to require.

It is said that Frank Crowe will have a birthday next October 12, and that he expects on that day to force the Colorado river out of the rockbound channel it has occupied for countless centuries, through two of those great 50-foot tunnels so that the real work of building the dam can begin.

Once the great river is captured and turned aside, the work of removing the debris from the river bed for a depth of 130 to 150 feet up and down stream will begin.

There we will find another outstanding work. An excavation will be made approximately large enough to engulf a ten story building 250 feet wide and 650 feet long below the normal level of the river's surface.

Which would be some hole in any kind of formation. But since this excavation must be made through gravel, rocks and quicksand saturated with water, the difficulties of the work become more apparent.

THE CRUCIAL TIME

JUST now is the time to which engineers considering the construction of Hoover dam looked forward with real concern. The high water period occurring while the diversion tunnels still are uncompleted and under construction, was feared as a serious menace to the work and, possibly, the means of great loss and damage to the contractors.

Now, so well have the plans been carried out and so complete are the precautionary measures, there is no fear of danger. Great barriers of reinforced concrete have been erected about the portals of each of the tunnels, dams of no small proportions, so that there is little or no danger of any flood being able to break its way into the tunnels.

We see the problems which for several years appeared so serious, now readily solved by the engineers. Which proves that anything may be accomplished if there is enough money available.

FROM CALIENTE Mrs. Walt Geiger arrived last night from her home in Caliente to spend a few days here visiting her husband. All clear makers of a San Francisco factory are 65 years old or older. Individual garages are provided by an interurban transportation company in London at a number of stations for customers to combine rail and automobile travel. Under an almost forgotten section of the Texas game laws, a hunter was fined $10 at San Antonio for offering wild deer antlers for sale. After three days at the bottom of a 45-foot well, a pig belonging to a Livingston, Texas, farmer was hauled to the surface.

VEGAS VAGARIES

If this here now that just keeps up by cracky we're liable to have a right smart spell of weather according to the old timers, who view for the first time in three months what is believed to be normal Las Vegas weather.

"Deer Park opens for the season," announce the ads. Cars along the highways at night infer that more than one deer is parking this season.

HERE COMES, ETC.

Climaxing the 1932 Leap Year Hunting Season comes the month of June, when all trophies are put on public display.

A WASHINGTON BYSTANDER

By KIRKE SIMPSON WASHINGTON-In these dark days for Uncle Sam's large family of office workers, when congress booms over painful subjects like pay cuts, furloughs and even job eliminations, one such worker has been surprisingly unconcerned. Young Dave Ingalls, navy air secretary, had already furloughed himself, without pay, to run for—and run away with—the Republican nomination for governor of Ohio.

YOUNG TEDDY'S ROUTE

It isn't so often that "little cabinetners" from Washington have found a quick chance for political promotion. "Young Teddy" Roosevelt did it some years ago in New York, going from an assistant secretaryship in the navy to a republican gubernatorial nomination. In 1930 young Truise Davidson, Ingalls' army comrade in the "little cabinet," dallied with the gubernatorial dreams a while. Tradition, as represented by what happened to his "little cabinet" predecessors who attempted or even thought about stepping up to a governor's chair, is not very encouraging for Mr. Ingalls.

STILL MAKING HISTORY

Mr. Ingalls made navy history in the war. He has already made party political history in Ohio, if not in the nation, "wet" crusading on the home grounds of the Anti-Balloon League itself. The question now arises whether
