KEY TO FALL OF MAYA CULTURE SOUGHT IN RUINS OF CITY FOUND IN YUCATAN

Temples discovered on the jungle... Inscriptions from which an expedition headed by Dr. Sylvanus Morley (photo) expect to piece out the history of a vanished Maya civilization. Calakmul (map) is the latest city discovered. The shaded area shows the old empire from which there was a migration into Yucatan.

WASHINGTON, June 6. (AP) — Calakmul, just visited by an expedition of the Carnegie Institute under Dr. Sylvanus Morley, is the latest of many great Maya cities to be discovered in the jungles of Yucatan and Guatemala. The Maya empire flourished there for 1,500 years, from the time of the birth of Christ until the discovery of America.

TO CHECK STOCK
Internal Revenue Collector Henry Albert, who is located in the city clerk's office, is now checking up on the government stamps on stock certificates.

If L. L. Snyder will call at the Free ticket office, he will receive a free ticket, good for today only at El Portal theater.

There for 1,500 years, from the time of the birth of Christ until the discovery of America. In Calakmul archeologists hope to find why the Mayas migrated from Guatemala, leaving their magnificent cities abandoned behind them and built new cities in Yucatan.

Calakmul lies just over the northern Guatemala border in Mexico, midway between the centers of the old empire, which flourished nearly 1,000 years, and the new empire, to which the Mayas migrated between 500 and 700 A. D.

Calakmul was a city of the old empire, which centered around a chain of lakes. The Mayas farmed on the slopes of the hills around the lakes.

Loose soil from the farms gradually may have washed down into the lakes, filling them until they became mere swamps, which exist there today, some scientists believe.

The swamp water, becoming contaminated, may have caused an epidemic of disease that drove the Mayas from the region, they suggest.

The remnants of the Mayas, who still live in Yucatan, know nothing of their ancestors.
