HUGE HOOVER DAM PROJECT IS VIEWED BY LEGION DELEGATES

RUMORS THICK AT CHICAGO PARLEY

CHICAGO, June 10 (U.P.)—Three possible explosions may upset the well-laid plans of Republican convention leaders.

First, the program to renominate Vice-president Curtis may be overturned at the last minute by a stampede of delegates in the same way that Calvin Coolidge was named as Harding's running mate in 1920 contrary to all plans of convention leaders.

Second, there is the remote possibility that the anti-prohibition sentiment may get out of hand and sweep the convention beyond the present plan of adopting a resubmission plank and force a direct appeal proposal into the platform.

Third, it is possible that President Hoover will attempt to dramatize his struggle to overcome depression by injecting into the convention a personal appeal for militant, economic solidarity which will stir the delegates out of their apathy and encourage them to go out and—??

Republican leaders representing the administration group are interested chiefly in having next week's convention renominate the Hoover-Curtis ticket and wet down the dust of the prohibition controversy with a resubmission plank.

Although this is the program, few would suspect it from the fog of rumor which has settled down over this thoroughly bored and dispirited gathering. Lacking the traditional enthusiasm of a national convention throng, displaying none of the bustle and color, the garish posters and the blaring bands of rival candidates, the 1932 convention throng stands around, shifting from one foot to the other, yawning, wondering if something won't happen to inject a little excitement into the convention.

Some are trying to agitate for a change in the vice-presidential end of the ticket; and new names are being pulled out of the hat every hour. Party managers like Dave Mulvane, the old-time Kansas national committeeman, E. E. Clements, Missouri national committeeman, Convention Keynoteur J. L. Dickinson, Party Treasurer Nutt and others of their standing have heard of no serious plans to displace him.

ALASKAN EXCAVATIONS REVEAL CULTURE OF ASIATIC DISCOVERERS OF AMERICA

Dr. Alex Hrdlicka, noted anthropologist, shown here examining the mummy of an infant found in Alaska, believes that the first discoverers of America followed roughly the course indicated by arrows, crossing from Siberia in large boats to bring a civilization highly developed. Kodiak island contains remnants of human inhabitants supporting his contention.

ANDERSON BROTHERS HOSTS TO MEN AND WOMEN OF LEGION AT BOULDER

One of the highlights of the American Legion convention was the trout luncheon yesterday at Anderson's mess hall. The affair was complimentary and extended by Legionnaires Harold and Bill Anderson and was a welcome aftermath to the trip over the Hoover dam workings. Music over the loud speaker system added to the enjoyment of the occasion. Various distinguished visitors were introduced by Commander Skinner, Walker "Brigham" Young, father and sponsor of the Boulder City Post, was presented and welcomed the guests. A unanimous vote of appreciation and thanks was given the Anderson Brothers and the affair was concluded. The Legionnaires and members of the Auxiliary then returned to Las Vegas.

SENATE OKAYS 300 MILLION LOANS TO STATES

WASHINGTON, June 10 (U.P.)—Three years after the collapse of the prosperity boom, the senate today passed a $300,000,000 unemployment relief bill which would permit federal funds to trickle immediately down into thousands of destitute homes through loans to states.

The vote, 72 to 8, was taken shortly after Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, strong administration supporter, had warned that "so sure as the sun rises tomorrow, some one of those 48 governors will apply these funds in such a strange manner as to create a national scandal."

One Democrat, Senator Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma, voted against the bill. The seven Republicans, all but Reed from the New England state, who opposed the measure were Hiram Bingham, Connecticut; George Moses, New Hampshire; Jesse Metcalf and Felix Hebert, of Rhode Island and Porter Dale and Warren Austin of Vermont.

The measure, sponsored by Senator Robert F. Wagner, Dem., N. Y., increases the capita, of the reconstruction finance corporation to allow $300,000,000 in loans to states for unemployment relief. Three percent interest would be charged, and the loan repaid beginning in three years, by deductions from grants for highway aid.

Prompt action on the bill was expected in the house. Senator Wagner was hopeful it would be in the hands of the President early next week.

Many of the advocates of the controversial bill were ready to admit it was "indirect" if not actual direct relief legislation for the nation's unemployed. However the senate, confronted with an increasingly serious unemployment situation was thoroughly "relief" minded and is in a hurry to adjourn for the convention.

"We simply make the states the agents," commented Senator George Norris, Repr., Neb.

Senator Hiram W. Johnson, Repr., Cal., then vigorously criticized the administration "for failing to realize until now the need of direct relief."

Two administration stalwarts quickly replied. Senator Hiram Bingham, Repr., Conn., said sharply the federal government was not responsible for the individual destitute.

PHILADELPHIA, June 10 (U.P.)—Great boats carrying discoverers of America antedating Columbus and even the Vikings crossed Bering straits from Asia probably 1,000 to 3,000 years ago.

This picture of a superior type of man who came to America perhaps was drawn for the American Philosophical society by Dr. Alex Hrdlicka of the National Museum of Washington. It was based on recent discoveries in Alaska.

SAILBOATS BROUGHT THEM
The boats, he said, had capacity for 40 to 50 persons each. Their sails were skins of seals, as remnants today show. Inflated bladders along their sides provided safety in the open northern seas.

The men and women who filled these vessels brought to America a highly developed mode of living.

"The old conception," said Dr. Hrdlicka, "of man coming barehanded with no culture is erroneous. He had a high class culture. He built on this culture in places like Mexico."

Alaska is still a growing piece of land, he said. In the past 1,000 years it has formed hundreds of thousands of square miles of new soil along its southern shores.

Buried under this fresh soil are many of the camping places of the great adventurers.

And here, far up the fjords, said Dr. Hrdlicka, are the long sought ancient sites. They cover from one to 40 acres each.

"Here," he stated, "we are finding human remains, most of them different from those previously known."
