

Emily Buzby, Dog Psychologist Knows All About Puppy Care

will not wish to come back. Make a big to-do over every good little thing he does. He will love the praise and soon be good, just to show off. Be very sure all material rewards are small. Never give sweets; a bit of apple or carrot answers the purpose perfectly.

It is more necessary that a puppy be weaned and able to eat food properly before being taken from his mother. If you wish to have the pick of a litter or for any cause must buy your dog very young, pay for it but make arrangements for it to stay where it rightfully belongs until it is at least six weeks old, better eight. A puppy taken under six weeks will very often be stunted, have a poor digestion and never be worth the time and care spent upon it.

He may cost anywhere from one dollar to five hundred dollars, but to begin with, irrespective of his worth, he needs good food, clean water, a warm bed, sunlight and exercise.

He has just left his mother and rollicking brothers and sisters. He is a little timid, everything is so big and strange. He is soft and cuddly and has a little cold wet nose. He is just the size to lie in your lap and chew the buttons on your dress or coat. If you start that way you will regret it forever; so much depends on so little. You will have ruined dresses from muddy paws, torn stockings from sharp nails and your friends will want to kick your dog as soon as you go out of the room. Why not start your puppy right?

Some puppies cry for the first few nights when taken to a new environment. A bottle of warm water well corked and placed in your puppy's bed will be a great comfort to him and often keep him quiet. For after all its a cold world and a comfortable dog is a quiet dog. It is also a good plan, for the first few days, to feed a puppy his dry ration in a dish in his bed. Let him connect his bed with something pleasant. Never punish him by sending him to bed. Watch him when he plays, and when he is tired and ready for a nap, coax or lift him into his bed and in this way get him accustomed to sleeping in one place before he is big enough to jump on the best chairs.

From the first hour he is in your home never allow him to jump upon anyone, and never, no matter how cute he is, feed him at the table. A dog should be so trained that when guests arrive he need not be hustled into a back room but can take his place quietly, politely and properly by the fireside or in a corner of the porch. Let him play, let him romp, let him dash around like a wild thing but at the right time and in the right place. "What a dog!" said in a stern voice will often bring a pup to his senses, while the judicious use of the newspaper spanker on his flanks will soon cure him of the jumping habit, if you have not encouraged it in the first place.

Never wash a puppy until he is six months old and not then if you can help it. A handful of absorbent cotton and a little hair tonic will take off any dust and soil and make his coat shine. Brushing every day will also help to keep him in the pink of condition.

Exercise is one of the most important factors in the satisfactory rearing of a dog. A dog-yard opening from an enclosed porch is ideal. There the dog can be allowed to run out in the sunlight. No day is too cold for him if the sun is shining.

"The training, feeding and management of young dogs are, after all, only rules of common sense and kindness," says Miss Buzby. "If you will abide by them, you will have one of the greatest joys life can give; the companionship of a healthy loving dog that you have raised from puppyhood with care; but not anxiety, and who because of that care adores you and will be faithful unto death."
