Have You a Little Color Chest in Your Home?

A well-equipped medicine chest in your home? Of course you have one. And, in all probability, a well-stocked closet of staple foods, too. You seldom have to rush to the drug store when your lively youngsters come home with a bruise, or make a trip to the grocery when you suddenly decide to make a cake. Are you as well equipped when you want to do a paint job? Can you lay your hands instantly on the right color for repainting a chair or touching up a window sill?

It's a good idea to organize your paint colors in the same convenient way as the other household supplies. Have a "color chest" furnished with the different tints and shades used throughout the interior of your house. Have a touch-up day every month. Renew the places that are getting worn—the baseboards, the window frames, or the doors, perhaps. Look over the furniture, too, in every room. And the floors. Don't overlook the sections of your floor that get the hardest wear and tear like the well publicized stitch in time, frequent paint touch-ups will save money and trouble, and will keep your home in the pink of condition.

How To Care For The "Perfect Food"

Buy Fresh Milk In Bottles. Keep It Cold and Clean

By Dr. J. Lynn Mahaffey
Director, New Jersey State Department of Health

In my last article I spoke of the attention which health officials give to see that milk, "the most nearly perfect food," reaches your doorstep in the finest possible condition, fresh and uncontaminated. I also admonished housewives to keep the milk in this condition in its final journey from doorstep to table.

This subject seems too important to leave without further discussion, for in this last step from the dairy to the ultimate consumer, all of the fine work of producer, distributor and health officer may be nullified by carelessness and thoughtlessness in the kitchen.

Buy Freshly Bottled Milk

In the first place, milk should be purchased in bottles if possible. This is such an important point that in most large cities and in many smaller communities it is now illegal to sell milk in bulk, by the "dip" method.

When your bottles arrive, provide a place for them at the doorstep—a little wooden box with a hinged lid will do. Leave a note for the milkman to place them inside. This will protect the milk from the heat of the morning sun, and also from the attentions of stray cats and dogs, until you have had an opportunity to pick up the bottles and put them in a better place.

Bringing in the milk should be the morning's first chore in warm weather, for the longer it stands without adequate refrigeration, the greater is the chance for bacteria to grow in it. Bring the bottle directly into the house, rinse off the bottle and cap and put the milk in the refrigerator unless it is to be used at once. Do not open the milk bottle until you are ready to use the milk. Before pouring out the milk carefully wash the rim of the bottle over which the milk must flow. Keep the milk cold and covered at all times.

This is the sixth of a series of articles on health and cleanliness prepared for this paper. Watch for Dr. Mahaffey's next article about "How to Be Sure Water is Pure."
