

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE Grace Moore TULLIO CARMINATI . . LYLE TALBOT -

Serialization by arrangement with COLUMBIA PICTURES

What Has Gone Before

Mary Barrett in a contest for a scholarship in Milan with the eminent teacher Guilio Monteverdi. She opinion, Bennett insisted that Guilio proceeds there, lives cheaply on her own savings and studies until she finds herself in debt. Bill Huston, a well-to-do American, loves Mary, but she refuses his help and finds employment singing in a cafe. Monteverdi visits the place in low spirits. A promising protegee, Mlle. Lally, has disappointed him. Her artistic possibilities neglected for love-making, the famous teacher has driven her out, declaring he will accept no more women students. When Mary sings, Monteverdi recognizes a great voice and undertakes her training on conditiion that all thoughts of love is banned. After a long period of iron discipline, during which Mary learns to hate Monteverdi, he arranges her operatic debut and guides her through to success. One triumph follows another. Her debut at the Vienna almost at hand, they dine at a famous restaurant. Mlle, Lally appears at their table. Mary resents Lally's attempted familiarities toward Monteverdi. She hurries to Bill Huston's apartment, announces her intention of marrying him and abandoning her career as they start on a hilarious party. Learing that Lally will substitute for her in "Carmen" Mary abandons the gaiety and hurries to the opera house to prepare for the performance.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VI

"Stop talking abuot Lally! She means nothing to me." Silencing Mary's protestations, Guilio humbly admitted he had gone to Lally's apartment. He confessed, "Every minute that I was with her I found that my heart was with a silly girl who plays tricks on me. For two years I have been fighting down what has been uppermost in my heart. Now I realize that I have always loved you. Your voice, your career, they mean nothing to me any more. If you will marry me, I do not care if you never sing again."

Guilio kissed her tenderly. The call boy's voice rang out, "Your entrance in five minutes, Mademoiselle."

Mary quickly started to put on her make-up. 'I'm going on and I'll sing a 'Carmen' tonight that'll make you really proud of me."

Hurriedly escorting her to the stage. Guilio stood in the wings and watched Mary make her entrance. He remained there throughout the around Guilio's neck. performance .

Mary Triumphs

curtain fell. The audience still applauded and clamored as Mary disappeared from sight of her admir-

Guilio ushered the visiting representative of the Metropolitan Opera into Mary's dreesing room. Mr. Bennett graciously congratulated her and Guilio, too, for their combined triumph, and invited the Maestro to visit him in the morning at his hotel.

Mary's shoulder, Guilio demanded, New York opera house, the goal of pride in anticipation of her suc-

"You want my Barrett, eh? Well, I can tell you now she is not ready for the Metropolitan."

Disagreeing with Monteverdi's see him in any case. Guilio escorted him to the door. He turned to Mary: "I am going to run home and fix the supper. A beautiful supper. You stay here, Angelina, and take good care of her. Angelina, she loves me."

Guilio personally supervised every detail of the supper with the same thoroughness that he devoted to a singing lesson. Arranging a bowl of flowers in the center of the table, Guilio heard a knock. He rushed to the door and throwing it wide open, cried happily, "My darling!"

Lally stood in the doorway and looked at him bitterly. Scarcely polite, Guilio demanded the reason for this unexpected intrusion.

"Why don't you try to get Howard gasped, "Did you see that?"

every singer's ambition.

She engaged a suite of rooms at a fashionable New York hotel and tically sprayed her throat. Testing reported for rehearsal of "Madame her voice, she started to sing a sim-Butterfly," the opera selected for her American debut. Gradually ,the conductor in charge, whose methods differed greatly from Monteverdi's undermined Mary's confidence and assurance. Constantly he stopped the rehearsal and insisted that Mary change her phrasing, or alter her tempo in rendition of a certain aria. Politely indifferent to her plight, fellow artists shook their heads sadly as they listened to her struggling to adapt herself to these new methods.

During the dress rehearsal, Mary, opened her mouth to sing and found herself unable to make a sound.

Hurling his baton to the ground, the conductor demanded, "Am I to understand that you have sung 'Butterfly' before?"

Mary nodded.

"Then what are you so nervous about? This is only a rehearsal. What do you expect to do tomorrow night?"

Confused and embarrased, Mary fled from the stage. Sobbing, she entered her dressing room.

Turning to the Managing Director and Mr. Howard, the conductor, Lower and to hold-Mary finally realizes that Guilio's devotion is the rock on which her triumphs rest.

(Posed by Tullio Carminati and Grace Moore)

to give me a contract for the Metropolitan?" demanded Lally.

Guilio promised to take care of the matter the first thing in the morning as a means of speeding Lally's departure.

Lally refused to leave unless Guilio would immediately call Mr. Bennett on the phone and try to get her a contract.

Taking hold of her arm, Guilio almost forcibly escorted her to the door. Hearing Mary's voice, Guilio stopped short. As the door opened Lally threw her arms ardently

Mary froze with horror. Angelina turned to Guilio. "This is a fine Critics and friends streamed back thing to do! And only a few hours stage to congatulate Mary when the ago you made love to this poor child."

Guilio begged, "Do not believe,

Contemptuously, Mary walked to Guilio's face.

Lally, as she chose her time to go. "It is always a mistake to mix lessons and love. Good-night."

Howard Bennett. She accepted the and everybody. Bill Huston, in an Placing his arms proudly around contract for her appearance at the adjacent box, tried to conceal his Grimly looking at Mr. Howard the Managing Director snapped, "And this is the great prima donna you raved about."

Defending his judgment, Mr. Howard explained that he couldn't understand what had caused the tremendous change in Mary's voice. They held a conference on the advisability of cancelling the performance or designating a substitute.

Keyed up to a terrific nervous tension, Mary sat applying the last minute corrections to her makeup, Desparately she tried to keep her nerves calm and concentrate on the impending performance.

"How much time?" Mary inquired, loking up at Angelina, pathetically. "Just eight minutes before your entrance Signorina."

The Play Goes On

The great opera house was jammed. A debut has always been a her room and slammed the door in | major social event, and the advance notices of Mary's American origin, "You are right, Maestro," sneered her European successes and the glamour of Monterverdi's tutelage, made this the gala performance of the year. Seated in a box, Mr. and Mary lost no time in telephoning Mrs. Barrett beamed at everything

In the dresing room, Mary franple scale. Half way up her voice seemed to melt. Grasping her throat, Mary looked at Angelina.

"Mamma mia, what is it?" Angelina cried.

"My throat feels tight." Mary looked around hopelessly. "He said I wasn't ready for the Metropolitan. He was right. I can't go through with it, I-

"Five minutes Miss Barrett, the call boy announced as he poked his head into the room.

Hysterical, Mary shouted, "Five minutes! Tell them I can't go on. I can't do it!"

Gulping in amazement and alarm, the call boy dashed to the stage manager. Quickly the latter notified higher officals. Pandemonium broke lose in the executive office.

The Managing Director burst into Mary's dressing room "What's this I hear about you not going on?"

Silencing him, Angelina turned to Mary desperately, "You told him you can sing without him-prove it! You must go on!"

Angelina pulled Mary to her feet and forced her towards the stage.

"Go on, it's your cue, your cue" she heard some one say.

The orchestra played Mary's introduction, but the terrified girl refused to go on. The conductor, sensing something was wrong, quickly signaled the musicians to repeat the introduction.

Turning to Mary, Angelina cried above the din of the music, "Look!"

Greeting Mary from the prompter's box, a fierce determination in his eyes, Guilio Monterverdi reached out his eloquent hand, as if to drag the notes from her throat. Into one word he put all the dynamic force at his command, "Sing!"

Mary attacked her first note. It came out slight and frail, but the spell was broken and in two bars her voice started to ring with the natural strength and clarity. Mary hit a high note beautifully and revelled in her newly found assurance. She sang to Guilio alone, putting all the tender feeling of the words in the aria into her singing.

A storm of applause rose from the audience as she finished, but Mary's eyes were focused on one spot. The prompter's box.

Guilio applauded vigorously as Mary received curtain call after curtain call.

After Mary's last bow, Guilio dashed back stage to her dresing room. Mary, waiting for that call, flew into his arms as he opened the door. He kissed her. "I promise you, Mary, never again to make love to a pupil."

"What about me?" Mary gazed up into his eyes.

"You are no longer a pupil, "Guilio protested. "After what I heard tonight, there is nothing more that I can teach you," Mary smiled into Guilio's eyes. The world outside was forgotten.

(THE END)

SHOPPING NEWS ADS PAY GREATEST DIVIDENDS ON DOLLARS INVESTED

Vegas Lodge No. 32 F. & A. M.

Stated Communications first Monday. Visiting Brothers welcome

K. O. KNUDSON, W. M. CLAUDE HAFF, Secretary.