

NEVADA FOUR-AITCHERS ARE CHAMPIONS

When the judges finished their deliberations at the recent Interstate Junior Livestock and Baby Beef show at South San Francisco, two Nevada youngsters were crowned champions for their work in hog raising in the 4-H club division of the division.

Competing against other Four-Aitchers from California, Utah, Idaho, and Oregon, the two boys, both from Douglas county, won top honors for their livestock raising ability.

Clarence Godecke, 16, who is shown on the left, took first place with his spotted Poland China Barrow in the class for that type of swine. In addition, with another of his hogs, he took second honors, while his pen of three barrows also won first place.

Harlan Fricke, 18, right, raised a Duroc Jersey which took the blue ribbon. For his excellent showing, he was awarded the scholarship of one hundred dollars open to the youthful hog raisers who are in 4-H club work.

Many other prizes were captured by the Nevada delegation to the show, not only in the hog competitions, but in the baby beef classes as well.

Raising good livestock is an important feature of 4-H club work, which in this state is under the direction of the University of Nevada agricultural extension service.

For purposes of clarity and convenience why shouldn't we refer to the congress that sat during the first New Deal administration as the "Ditto Congress?"

Military strategists say that Uncle Sam needs very little aid in case of defensive war. Fine. And let's remember to depend on ourselves for what aid we need.

Six miles west of the Moapa Valley highway the eastern entrance to the Valley of Fire, so named because its red sandstone cliffs at sunrise or sunset, seem to be aflame. From the east entrance, points in Arizona and in Utah can be seen.

Farther to the east is Atlal Rock named for the chief weapon of primitive peoples. It bears extensive picture writings. Near it was a water hole, still used at some seasons of the year. Two miles from Atlal Rock along Mouse's Tank Trail are some of the best preserved writings in the state. Near Atlal Rock are many petrified trees. It is possible to continue west and north for about 17 miles to Highway 91 at Crystal, but the road is rough and slow. sanitary accommodations. The elevation of Mt. Charleston is 11,910, which is 11,270 feet above Lake Mead, only 50 miles away. The peak is reached by a marked trail from near the lodge and camp ground. This trail rises 4,000 feet in three miles and passes through the largest grove of foxtail pine in the world. From the trail may be seen Mt. Pempiute to the north, Mt. Wilson to the south, Virgin Peak to the east, and Mt. Whitney to the west.

There are short, easy hikes to waterfalls, and in the late spring the mountainside is a mass of wild flowers.
