

NEVADA WOOL PRICES FOLLOW YEARLY TREND

Here's the way wool prices on the Boston market, which sets the price for fleeces grown in Nevada, act through the year.

All four grades, as well as the average of them, show the same trend, being highest during January and lowest in price in May, June and July.

That's the reason Nevada sheepmen try to sell their clip during the winter.

The chart illustrates the monthly average at Boston for wool on a scoured basis for the period January 1, 1924, to June 1, 1937.

The camp is under the command of Brigadier General Walter C. Sweeney, commander of Fort Douglas, and Major William H. Hammond is executive and training officer.

Six Nevada boys were admitted to the camp, including one from Clark county, two from Humboldt and three from Churchill.

The camp will end July 30, after a month of intensive military work and athletics.

Two families of skunks staged a feud in the district school near Owosso, Mich., and as a result the school board had a special meeting and solemnly declared the building "unfit for occupancy."

Old Unionville Mill Dismantled

(Nevada State Journal)

Wrecking crews were engaged last week in dismantling the old 50-ton cyanide mill at the Arizona mine near Unionville, southeastern Pershing county. The Arizona discovered in 1862, was one of the richest silver mines known in the country and produced around $5,000,000 from a small area.

Long involved in litigation, the property was acquired some years ago by the Sunset Mining & Development Co., of which E. S. Van Dyck was president.

It has had several small mills and the cyanide plant now being dismantled was completed by one of the Van Dyck companies, several of which in succession acquired title to the old mine.

An account of the Arizona mine in the Review-Miner of Lovelock says that production from the property reached its peak when Unionville was in its glory, and was the chief mainstay of what was then the most thriving center in Humboldt county and its county seat. Almost pure silver was obtained at times.

Oldtimers tell of what was known as the "sugar bowl" from which native silver in granular form was literally shoveled out. The orebody, the shape of a sugar bowl and as large as a good sized room, gave the deposit its name.

After the turn of the century, an effort was made to revive the mine under the name of Sunset, but the operation proved unprofitable, on account of the low price of silver. Cyaniding was resorted to. Efforts were made to work the dumps. Large sums of money were lost in these efforts.

During the last few years the property has been in litigation, mostly over wages owed, and it was over that that Sheriff C. A. Chapman was ordered to sell the property last year. Most of the machinery is reported to be obsolete. The fact that it is situated high on the mountainside will make its removal more difficult.

Camp Under Way At Fort Douglas

The seventeenth annual Citizens' Military Training Camp got under way at Fort Douglas, Utah, at 5:45 a. m. July 1st. Two hundred thirty-two boys from four states, very much alive got their first taste of military drill and army life.

General Walter C. Sweeney administered the oaths of allegiance to the new trainees Friday afternoon, while in the evening an excellent program was given by Lt.
