Nevada Turkey Outlook Better

A smaller crop this season, coupled with a stronger demand by consumers, has improved the outlook for Nevada turkey growers.

In Nevada itself, this year's crop of the holiday birds is estimated at from 25 percent to 35 percent under that of a year ago, according to L. E. Cline of the University of Nevada agricultural extension service.

Disappointing results of last year's operations, caused in part by the interruption of shipping, was the main factor in the decision of Nevada farmers to reduce their turkey numbers this year, Cline said this week.

Prospective high feed costs for this year and excessive storage at the beginning of 1937, he stated, also were important in farmers' decision to reduce turkey numbers.

In the United States as a whole, the same reasoning was operative, with the result that the crop for this year for the entire nation is forecast by the U. S. department of agriculture at 10 percent under the 1936 crop.

Because of this situation, not only at home but in the whole country, prices more favorable to the Nevada turkey producer are expected by Cline.

NOTED G-MAN IS INVITED TO VEGAS

An invitation has been extended to J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal bureau of identification to attend the annual convention of the Nevada Peace Officers' Association, which meets in Las Vegas on November 6, 7 and 8. Our congressional delegation have also been invited to attend.

It is planned to invite Governor Richard Kirman to attend the convention or send a representative. A similar letter will be sent E. Raymond Cato, head of the California state highway patrol.

One of the features of the conclave will be a trip of inspection to Boulder dam, officers in charge declare. Business meetings will include discussions of current law enforcement problems.

Sheriff W. H. "Hub" Austin of Carson City, vice-president, is expected to preside in the absence of President George Brady, former Reno police officer who is now connected with the federal alcohol tax unit in San Francisco. New officers will be elected during the convention.
