GOLDFIELD HOTEL CLOSURES ITS DOORS

The old "Goldfield Hotel," at one time considered not only the finest hotel in Nevada but one of the finest in the west, has closed its doors to the public.

It was constructed during those days when Goldfield was the mining camp of the hour at a cost of $750,000 and at that time was the only hotel in the state with an elevator. In those days dinner at the hotel was a regular ceremony and people from all the world gathered, some in evening clothes and others in jeans and hob nail boots, to enjoy the delectable food and talk over the day's events. Could the walls of the dining room and lobby speak they could tell some interesting tales.

It is understood that Los Angeles parties are considering reopening the hotel.
