CARRYING ON FOR SAFETY "An 83 per cent reduction in the rate of industrial accidents in the last 11 years."

That's a remarkable and splendid record of which General Motors can well be proud, especially in view of its continuing improvement.

In 1939 the 88 G. M. plants in the United States and Canada reported a frequency of only 3.72 lost-time accidents for each million hours worked, a 24 per cent improvement over 1938, marking the fifth consecutive year in which a new low record was established.

In paying special tribute to employees, supervision and management, who through their cooperation, made this safety record possible, Floyd O. Tanner, Vice-President in charge of labor relations for General Motors, declared: "In 1940 intensive effort is being made to further reduce accidents, with particular emphasis on the elimination of accidents through safety education."

Looks like they're carrying on inside the automobile factories. Is as much being done for safety elsewhere?

Work has been temporarily suspended by the Kalem Company in Las Vegas under the direction of John P. McGowan, on account of a peculiar accident to the leading lady, Miss Helen Holmes. While the company was doing some "desert" stuff, Miss Holmes picked up a piece of barrel cactus, broke it apart with her gloved hands, and then unconsciously wiped her eyelid. Several pieces of the fuzzy barbs from the cactus got into her eye, causing pain that was most excruciating. The eye became very much inflamed.
