cold, and at once proceeded to refresh himself with a little drink, and another and another, until he was rip-roaring drunk, unable to play and not caring whether there was a dance or not.

Great was the disappointment and distress of the crowd of young people gathered from the wilderness to enjoy a dance — a rare pleasure in those days. Fortunately some cautious individual had taken charge of the drunken fiddler's fiddle, but it was too late to send far over the mountains to find and bring another man to play it.

One of the young fellows from the Reno country finally came forth modestly admitted that he had learned to play a tune or two, and he was at once surrounded and pressed into service for better or are attorneys for the petitioner. for worse.
