

ENGLAND WILL SURVIVE BLITZKREIG, SAYS RALLI

Vivid Picture of Britain's Coming Ordeal Is Painted By Vegas Attorney

(Following is the Broadcast by Attorney Paul Ralli, given last Sunday evening at 8:00, as part of his series on The European War.—Editor.)

(By PAUL RALLI)

Much speculation is going on at the present time as to what will be the turning point of the war. Some said Bardia, others claim Tobruk, the annihilation of the Italian army in Libya, a revolt in Ethiopia, the rise of the 300,000 French soldiers in French Africa. Others claim the Turkish participation in the war in favor of England, the Russian participation in favor of Germany.

My personal opinion is that although these occurrences might have a certain influence upon the morale of the belligerents, still not one of them is sufficient cause for a decisive victory. You can't kill a man by cutting off his finger, you can't floor a man by giving him a black eye. Nor will a successful invasion of Greece have much to offer, for the war will not be decided in the Balkan front.

The war has been going on and on for a year and five months, and with the exception of some battles like Dunkirk, the rest has been shadow boxing. Both countries, England and Germany, are determined to win the war and there will be no compromise. A show-down is bound to take place very shortly. For the only chance that Germany has in winning the war is by a direct knock-out blow in the form of a successful invasion.

Hitler is a very sick man today, he has not recovered yet from the shock of England's determination to fight, after the fall of France, and America's determination to help England.

When in June, 1940, Paris fell, Hitler thought that was the end of the war. Those near him described his condition as hysterical. They saw their leader for the first time in a mood so different from his usual one. He jumped, giggled, and clapped his hands and patted his stomach, shook hands with everybody present and skipped continuously. The war was over. So sure was he that England would capitulate, after the fall of France, that the German and Italian newspapers started to enumerate the various points of the coming Armistice, but at that time something happened to upset the whole works.

In England, a bulldog by the name of Winston Churchill, who became their leader, had one thing in mind; to free Europe of Hitlerism, and in America President Roosevelt, an enemy of dictators, made the unprecedented decision to run for a third term. Hitler and Mussolini, still hoped for an Indian uprising and an Arabian revolt, but instead the Arabs declared themselves for England and the Indian potentates came out with enormous contributions of money for the extermination of the dictators.

Before recovering from that slap on the face there came to Mussolini and Hitler a series of sledge hammer blows by Roosevelt in the form of the Havana Conference, the purpose of which was to strengthen the Western Hemisphere, and at the same time to check German and Italian propaganda and fifth column activities in South America and Mexico, his election as president of the United States and his policy of full aid to Great Britain and to all democracies who resist dictatorships, followed by the exchange of fifty United States destroyers needed badly by England in return for naval and air bases in Newfoundland, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Trinidad, and British Guiana, and his disregard for any threats by dictators as to how they will construe such an attitude.

Confronted with such facts, Hitler turned to Japan for assistance against the United States, which was given in the form of a three power agreement between Italy, Germany and Japan, followed by the Japanese ultimatum to French Indo-China for permanent acquisition of Japanese naval and air bases, with a warning to the United States to keep off, stating that Japan is prepared to face a major crisis with the United States, the purpose of which warning was to frighten the United States, keeping her busy in the Pacific, so that she can lose interest in the European affairs, and reduce if not cut off completely her aid to England.

Another slap in the face was administered to all three powers at this time and their agreement, when the United States absolutely disregarded such an agreement and such Japanese warning, instructing consular offices in the Far East to advise the United States citizens to come home. At the same time calling for conscription of its manpower, and proceeding towards its objectives at full speed.

Confronted with such an attitude from the New World, Hitler knew then and there that there is but one thing left for him to do, and that is to risk all in an attempt to successfully conquer England. To do that he must do it quickly before the industrial wheels of this country, supply

England with enough planes and war materials to tip the balance in favor of England.

The weather so far has kept him from attempting it, but as soon as the weather is favorable, we must expect the world's most terrific blitzkrieg upon England. Risking all for the sake of all, this will go down in history as the No. 1 battle of all ages. Where the greatest military minds will pit themselves against each other for the greatest stakes.

When will that happen? It will happen when winter snows shall have passed away; when the trees will be green again; when the channel waters are calm and the breakers shall cease to plunge over therocks, when the skies are clear again, when the sun will be shining and the birds will begin singing in the trees; in the youth of the year when England is most beautiful—then it will be England's most dangerous hour; the darkest hour; and then the greatest blitzkrieg will take place in which every man, woman and child will have to fight for his life.

When submarines will fight war ships and big bombers will fly by the thousands to drop their bombs and spray their mustard and poison gases in a desperate effort to bring England down to her knees. When an estimated twenty thousand planes will carry swarms of parachutists behind the English channel lines, and thousands of small vessels and torpedo boats simultaneously will carry troops across the channel.

Will England be able to survive such a blitzkrieg? Yes, for the English are determined to fight for their lives. Their prime minister crystallized their sentiments when he said, "We shall defend our island whatever the cost may be. We shall fight on beaches, landing grounds, in fields, in streets and on hills. We shall never surrender and even if, which I do not for the moment believe, this island or a large part of it were subjugated and starving, then our Empire beyond the seas, armed and guarded by the British fleet will carry on the struggle until in God's good time the New World, with all its power and might, sets forth to the liberation and rescue of the Old."

During August, 1939, a short time before the declaration of war, I spent some time in London and Southampton, and at that time, lectures were given and classes were held in every town in England for women, teaching them how to treat mustard and poison gas infections and how to take care of such victims.

Basing, therefore, by opinion upon the fact that the English people have been bracing themselves for any eventuality ever since that time, and knowing their courage and pride, as a result of having lived in London for four years, I venture to say that England will survive the coming blitzkrieg.

STAGE VERSUS STORK!

Genuinely surprised were radio fans this week when glamorous Maxine, whose deep haunting voice ruled the airways in popularity for "Hour of Charm" listeners, suddenly announced her intention to retire from stage and radio! The reason: as Mrs. James F. Doyle of New York City for the past four years, she is expecting a visit from the stork come April. Most surprised was Phil Spitalny, director of the program's all-girl band, who didn't know she was married until she announced her retirement!
