THREE WORKERS TO GERMANY FOR EACH RETURNED PRISONER

COMPIEGNE, FRANCE-Three French able-bodied workers must go to Germany to work in order that one French prisoner be released. These are the wounded prisoners returning. The inscriptions would make it appear that the returning soldiers are cheering Petain and Laval. When the train arrived, the workers were waiting at the station to take the train back to Germany.

Am I mobilized for this, my war? Or am I clinging to nonessentials? Over and above my job, have I assumed my proper responsibility as a citizen in my lined my life, made wise use of minor grievances because such lars may help fight the battle? Money and goods are needed. This is a total war-and it all depends on me! Am I keeping a soldierly self-control? Am I seeing to it that the whispered rumor stops when it reaches me? That I do not pass on any divisive thought? Am I living my faith? Am I, who talk of the glory of democracy, hold-ing out a friendly hand to my neighbor, keeping from my heart and mind all prejudice and hatred toward any one, regardless of class, creed, or color? Am I putting into daily practice the ideals to which I give lip allegiance? Only in this way can democracy endure—it all depends on me.

I cannot close this self-searching with a moral—but only with a prayer, in the words of the Psalmist, "Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not." It all depends on me.—Goldfield News (Ruth Taylor).

SOBER ELECTION

The election this fall may surprise some of the politicians who still regard politics as merely a "game" with no holds barred. There is a healthy tendancy now to consider an election as a sober responsibility and an important part of government. War emphasizes such public values. The old guff and bunk and bluff that were viewed with smiling tolerance in normal times may not serve now. The best assets for "politiking" this year may be seriousness, knowledge of public affairs, a sense of "what it's all about" and a clear notion of what public service should mean in these times.—Ely Times.
