

New SA. Condemnation

UNITED NATIONS-- South Africa's policies in Southwest Africa were condemned last week by the special United Nations Committee on Decolonization.

A 15-nation resolution warning South Africa that widespread bloodshed could result from the police state's apparent efforts to take Southwest Africa into the republic was approved by a 21-0 vote, with the United States, Great Britain and Australia abstaining.

The resolution said any attempt by South Africa to annex a part or a whole of the territory would violate international law, the mandate under which South Africa has administered the one-time German territory since League of Nations days, and the U. N. charter.

The resolution called for the Security Council to keep an eye on the situation as a serious threat to peace.

It also asked Secretary-General U Thant to keep trying to establish a U. N. presence in the territory in the form of a technical assistance representative who would pave the way for educational and other reforms aimed at giving the territory independence.

Sidney R. Yates, U. S. representative, said the United States strongly opposed apartheid (segregation) but could not support the resolution because it did not agree that the situation threatened international peace.
