PARTY ON THE PATIO

This summer, most often you'll probably plan casual affairs, come-as-you-are suppers that start with grilled burgers and end with watermelon or ice cream. Yes, indeed, it's time to move your entertaining out-of-doors to the backyard or patio. Fresh-air parties can be planned in an elegant, yet relaxing manner.

Parties like luau are fun for the guests and hostess alike because the food is unusual, the decorations colorful and gay and the dress requirements fulfilled with a simple sheath or muumu for the gals, a wild-patterned shirt for the men.

A menu of sweet-sour ribs or kabobs accompanied by steaming bowls of rice, a huge salad bowl, fruit-filled pineapple shells and Apricot Island Pie will set the scene for the gayest of all parties.

The pie is not difficult to prepare thanks to the convenience of canned fruit pie fillings. The fillings used in this island pie are peach and apricot--golden in color, tart of flavor, delicious fruit fillings for this and many other desserts as well. The pie fillings are blended with sour cream and coconut--a combination that results in total eating enjoyment. Keep the pie chilled till serving time, then cut into generous wedges and serve with hot tea or coffee or a cold beverage.

With pie like this to complete your luau, all you'll need is some island music for background atmosphere and bright flower leis to decorate guests as they arrive.

Year after year, coffee continues to be our favorite beverage. And all the while, it grows more popular as a flavoring ingredient, too. You find coffee in every kind of dessert imaginable, in breads and even in main dishes. In fact,

Morgan was called from the stage at the Hacienda and rushed home to be with his family. After being assured by Mrs. Morgan and Sonny that they "weren't afraid" and arranging with Bob Bailey, chairman of the Nevada Equal Rights Commission, to have the house placed under surveillance for the rest of the night, Morgan returned to the Hacienda for the last show.

Neighbors offered to have Mrs. Morgan and Sonny stay with them until the following day, but they declined with thanks.

Las Vegas Urban Renewal director Gene Amberg, who lives across the street from the Morgans, said there had been "some grumbling" from a few residents of the area when the Morgans moved in, but there had been nothing coffee as a flavor is so much in demand that it is appearing in more and more packaged foods and frozen foods.

Of all the desserts that coffee flavors, ice cream and other icy sweets are among the most familiar and delectable. Take, for instance, this tall, tempting Coffee Frozen Custard. The flavor is delicate, but definitely and deliciously coffee. And what dessert could possibly make a more striking appearance?

to indicate anyone would resort to violence in an attempt to force the Morgans out of the neighborhood.

"We're staying," Morgan told the VOICE Monday. "I'm just as particular as other people about where I live and I like it right here."

Mrs. Morgan said there had been no indication from neighbors that they were unwelcome. "We can't understand this," she said. "We inquired about Las Vegas before moving here and people told us it was a good place to live. And Sonny seemed to be getting along well with the other children around here."

It was later reported that the people who had sold the house to the Morgans had been threatened by reprisals.

Spokesmen for District Attorney Ted Marshall and Police Chief Leo Kuykendall said their departments were "dismayed" by the occurrence and promised prosecution to the "fullest extent of the law" if the guilty party or parties are apprehended.

The local office of the FBI also was reported to be investigating the matter.
