Introduction of the topless swim suit to the fashion market has created considerable controversy in this country and abroad. Authorities everywhere are mulling ways to deal with this problem once some daring female decides to venture on their beaches a la Vegas showgirl.

Many communities, including the nation's capital, discovered there was no law on the local books requiring the upper part of the body to be completely covered in public--although one magistrate did note there was a law against inciting to riot.

Many stores, including several here in Las Vegas, have been featuring these abbreviated costumes in their display windows. However, let us hope that any "lady" who decides to purchase one of these garments will confine her obeisance to the fad of the moment to sun bathing at home or on secluded private beaches.

Creation of a topless cocktail dress has prompted more concern as to just what the designers have in mind, but we would like to point out one thing: It certainly does not require much skill or imagination to create such "designs."

Furthermore, if the designers don't watch out, before they know it the top lines will be hitting the hemlines and they will have designed themselves right into the unemployment lines. S.R.
