

NEGRO POSTMASTER IN LOS ANGELES

LOS ANGELES -- Leslie N. Shaw became the first Negro postmaster of a major post office in the United States when he took the oath of office in impressive ceremonies at the Statler Hilton Hotel here recently.

Shaw, 42, was sworn in by Postmaster General John A. Gronouski who came here from Washington, D.C. for the occasion.

Showing no signs of nervousness, the tall, handsome postmaster intoned the oath "I do solemnly swear" carefully and articulately as almost 1,000 fellow citizens looked on.

His appointment by the late President Kennedy having been approved by the U.S. Senate, Postmaster Shaw thus became the official boss of more than 10,300 employees of the huge, sprawling Los Angeles post office.

A graduate of Ohio State University with a bachelor degree in business administration, Shaw comes well prepared for his important position. He formerly was an officer in a local savings and loan association.

Shaw's post office last year had receipts totaling $93,686,082.87, and this total is expected to be considerably higher this year.

New Student Aid Program

NEGRO HIGH SCHOOL students with academic potential who attended Freedom Schools in Mississippi last summer will be given help toward college admission in a program announced by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students.

In cooperation with the College Entrance Examination Board, students selected by their summer teachers as promising college material will be tested. Then efforts will be made to place them in special summer institutes offered by colleges for students who do not meet minimum standards.

Students entering their junior year are being selected so that they can participate in such institutions following both their junior and senior years in high school.
