Gov. Johnson's Never-Never Land

Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr. of Mississippi is damaging his state in trying to help it. We can draw no other conclusion from the picture of conditions the Governor painted in a recent appearance on the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show.

"We have very little trouble in Mississippi," Gov. Johnson said. He declared the Negroes in Mississippi "are very, very happy." He said the races are living together there "in harmony."

What is to be made of this? Most people in other states of the Union and other countries of the world will accept it, we suppose, as meaning that Mississippians cannot be expected to face even the most obvious facts where race is concerned, that there is no reasoning with them, that what they say about the race question cannot be expected to make any sense.

As a politician, Gov. Johnson may feel obliged to make statements such as these. We do not doubt that between Vinegar Bend and Yellow Rabbit there are voters who would reject him if he did not. But we can assure him—and them—that it does only harm. Mississippi is eventually going to have to begin to talk sense about what is happening—starting, apparently, with admission that it is happening. It would be so much better for everyone concerned if that beginning could be made now.
