

Anderson Sets Up Office

NEWLY APPOINTED Nevada Commission on Equal Rights of Citizens executive secretary James Anderson this week was preparing to set up offices in the local State Building at 215 E. Bonanza Rd.

The Las Vegas advertising and public relations man was named to his new post last weekend by Gov. Grant Sawyer following a recommendation by the five-member agency that is primarily responsible for enforcing state equal rights legislation.

Anderson, 50, was born in Taladega, Ala., and educated in Muskogee, Okla. Before coming to Las Vegas several years ago, he was active in labor relations and civil rights work in the Los Angeles area after serving as an Air Force identification specialist in World War II.

He has been serving as chairman of the Las Vegas NAACP labor and industry committee and as a job coordinator for Operation Independence in its relations with the National Youth Corps.

Anderson played a prominent role in drives for Nevada civil rights legislation during the 1963 and 1965 sessions of the state legislature.

A PLEDGE for INTERRACIAL JUSTICE

I BELIEVE we are all children of God, equal in His eyes and equal under the laws of these United States.

I BELIEVE each child of God — of every race, creed, color and national origin — has individual worth, and should be treated justly, with equal opportunity to enjoy his rightful place in God's world.

I BELIEVE the command to love all others as one's self allows of no exception.

THEREFORE, I PROMISE to work with unfaltering courage — for adequate housing, integrated schools, and fair employment; for equal treatment in public, religious, and professional life; for interracial justice and charity based on the laws of God and man.

MAY OUR HEAVENLY FATHER bless this promise and sustain my undertaking.

1936: Jesse Owens was winning 4 gold medals at the Olympic Games. New England Life was in its 102nd year.

If you were born in 1936...

See how many dollars New England Life can put in your estate if you start now.

Here are some figures to prove that right now is an ideal time to take advantage of cash-value life insurance.

Say you start with a $15,000 New England Life policy now. Assume you use dividends to build up additional protection automatically. (For illustration, we'll apply our current dividend scale here, although these scales do change from time to time.) The cash value of your policy at age 65 is $16,723. Premium payments total only $10,425. So all the dollars you put in and $6,298 more can be yours at retirement. At the same time, the policy's protection value has risen from $15,000 to $25,532!

Can you imagine a surer way to accumulate an estate for yourself and your family? Let one of our agents tell you about a New England Life policy. Or if you'd like more information by mail just write to New England Life, Department 7S, 501 Boylston Street, Boston, Massachusetts 02117.
