

Flu Protection Urged

THE NEVADA HEART Association has joined public health authorities in recommending immunization with Influenza vaccine with emphasis placed on the advisability of flu shots for a number of high-risk groups.

Medical forecasters, throughout the nation, have predicted a heavy outburst of influenza this year, based on the two-to-three-year cycle typical of the disease. The last major outbreaks were on the West Coast in 1963-64 and in the United States, generally, in 1962-63.

It is especially recommended that persons with a heart or circulatory problem check with the doctor on the advisability of vaccination as they are likely to be more seriously affected than others if they develop flu. Included in this group are those suffering from such respiratory ailments as asthma, emphysema, and diabetes.

Others listed in the high-risk groups are persons in older age groups. Influenza deaths are disproportionately higher among those past age 45, and even higher in the over-65 bracket. Others in the high-risk classification are pregnant women, and patients in nursing homes and chronic disease hospitals. The Nevada Heart Association has suggested that everyone, whether or not there is a heart problem, check with the doctor about protection from influenza.

The newest vaccine developed offers protection against five different types of virus, all capable of causing flu. Although it does not insure complete immunity, vaccination has produced a marked degree of protection for a large majority of those who have received it.

Flu vaccine is administered in two doses. Those vaccinated within the past two years need only one booster dose.
