HEART ASSOCIATION
EVER ON STANDBY

"May I help you?" At any given moment of the day, someone in the Heart Association Office, 704 South 6th Street, may be saying this in response to an appeal from someone in this community.

The person at the other end of the line may be: A father wanting to know how to get help in paying for a heart operation his little girl needs; a seventh grader needing material for his junior high school science project; a man recovering from a heart attack who wants to know what kind of work he can do; a young woman who had rheumatic fever asking whether or not she is wise to marry and have children or a housewife seeking to learn how she can modify the family diet to protect her husband's heart.

NOT ALL these questions are asked every day, of course, but they are typical of those that stream into the Heart Association office all year round. Answering them is the responsibility of the Heart office staff. Answers to many of the questions can be found in the educational materials and booklets available on request. In other cases, particularly when an individual asks questions about his own health, he is advised that his own physician is the appropriate source.

Many requests are for help with family problems related to heart disease and stroke. Often the physician advises his patient to call on the Heart Association to act as liaison with special services needed for total care. If you have a question about the heart and circulation or about heart disease, call 382-9682, or stop in at your local Heart Association Office.
