"Expect Greater Activism From Returning Veterans"

NEW YORK - (NPI)--Negro soldiers in Vietnam can be expected to fight back against threats or intimidation when they return home, a University of Michigan instructor has declared.

Charles C. Moskos, Jr., writing in the American Journal of Sociology, declared that "techniques of violence and organizational skill acquired in military service may be a new factor in the Negro's quest for equality" in situations where Negroes are intimidated by physical threat or force.

DISCUSSING THE possibility of greater activism among Negro servicemen returning to civilian life, he noted that "Robert F. Williams, the leading advocate of armed self-defense for Negroes, explicitly states that his Marine Corps experience led to his beliefs.

"It also seems more than coincidence that the 10 founders of the Deacons for Defense and Justice, a paramilitary group organized in 1964 to counter Ku Klux Klan terrorism, were all veterans of Korea or World War II."
