principal or other school official can give for turning down an application form is that it is invalid on its fact. But the regulations imply that school officials can take the initiative on the basis of their own prior beliefs and knowledge and reject an application that is valid on its face.

The regulations also do not stress the importance of free lunches over reduced price lunches, a factor which many anti-hungry crusaders believe will lead local school boards to save their money by nickel and diming poor children into malnutrition.

They had heard testimony about school administrators setting their own policies, determining who in their school would receive lunch, free, at a reduced price, or at all. They had listened to mothers describe embarrassing questions they had to answer to some official's satisfaction before their child could receive food; and they had heard volumes of testimony about children made to stand in special lines or singled out in some other outlandish and demeaning manner if they were to receive free or reduced price meal. Most of all, they heard about hungry children--from the East to the West coasts.

Hence, they had stated, "A national standard . . . shall be used. . . in lieu of the multi-standard . . . It is expected that this will be the same as established by (HEW and OEO)." And they had made it crystal clear that "under no circumstances shall those unable to pay be charged for their lunch."

According to the VA, about 3,300 payments not to exceed $1,600 each toward the purchase of an automobile will be made in fiscal year 1971 to veterans who, as a result of performance of military duty, lost the use of an extremity or were blinded.

The VA is urging nearly 667,000 veterans whose term life insurance policies are due for renewal this year to examine them closely to determine whether they should convert to permanent plan policies.
