Millions of couples in the U. S. use effective birth control methods to delay or prevent pregnancies. But once they are sure they have as many children as they want, many look for a surer, easier way to avoid unplanned pregnancies. Men have been offered the contraceptive choice through the technique of vasectomy or male sterilization.

The operation is safe and easier to do than female sterilization. It can be done under a local anesthetic in less than half an hour. Hospitalization is not necessary, and very little time need be lost from work.

Vasectomy involves closing the tubes through which sperm travel. Vasectomy does not alter sexual potency, nor does it affect in any way the production of male hormones responsible for masculine characteristics.
