TOYS DON'T PLAY FAIR

Baby dolls, choo-choo trains, squeezable, squeaker animals -- toys are part of the memories of childhood play.

But toys themselves don't always play fair. A poorly-designed toy -- or a toy in the hands of a child too young to handle it -- can cause permanent injury or death, warns the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.

U.S. CPSC injury figures are projections of data collected from 119 National Electronic Injury Surveillance System (NEISS) hospitals which indicate that in fiscal year 1973 nearly 515,000 injuries associated with toys, tricycles and bicycles were treated in hospital emergency rooms. NEISS data do not include injuries treated at home, in doctors' offices, health centers, school health facilities, or after direct hospital admission.

The U.S. CPSC is an independent Federal regulatory agency with authority to set mandatory safety standards for toys and many other consumer products. It also has the power to ban the sale of hazardous toys and household products. The cumulative CPSC Banned Products List includes 1,500 different toys.

To help you choose the right toys this Holiday season, the U.S. CPSC offers these safety hints:

- *Be Toy Safety conscious.
- *Consider the child's age, size, and ability when buying. Many toys now have age group labels on the package.
- *Certain toys, such as chemistry sets and electrical toys, should be bought only for older, mature children.
