

The guy who did this sure doesn't like you.

It's not hard to imagine how you'd feel at two o'clock in the morning if you had a flat, and you coaxed your car to a public phone to call for help.

And found this.

The vandal who broke it didn't want anyone to be able to use it.

So you're mad. And we're angry, too. We know people use pay phones because they need to call someone.

That's really the whole idea behind coin phones. They're a service to the public. (That's why people call them public phones.)

We have a lot of public phones located all around our service area. So many, in fact, we sometimes don't know if one of them is out of order unless someone tells us.

We can usually have it fixed within two hours after we hear about it.

So, if you ever see a broken pay phone, won't you please tell us about it? Just call 114 and report the number and location.

Who knows? Maybe the next fellow needing it might even be somebody you know.
