SCHOLARSHIPS AVAILABLE

Scholarships and a monthly living allowance are available for students who wish to become part of the University Year For Action at UNLV. The UYA is a year-long program in which students work for local social service agencies addressing poverty related problems. While they work, they earn academic credits in the program co-sponsored by Action, the federal volunteer agency, and the UNLV Department of Social Services. Participating agencies provide tuition scholarships for their students and the federal government pays a small monthly living allowance, according to Kate Schonmeyer of UNLV. She said applicants must be a full-time student at the university and at least 18 years of age. For details, contact Schonmeyer in the Department of Social Services on the campus.
